E D W A R D,
LORD BISHOP OF SALISBURY.

MY LORD,

HERE are obvious reasons why I should neither venture, nor presume, to obtrude more than the mere expression of my earnest sense of the many benefits which have followed your Lordship's unwearied labours in the Diocese, over which, by the Divine Permission, you have been placed.

I was made deacon, and ordained to the priesthood, by your Lordship: since that time, with the exception of a very brief interval, I have exercised the duties of my office, and resided, in this Diocese. And now, as an acknowledgment, at least most sincere, of gratitude for much and long continued kindness, I gladly avail myself of the permission which has been given me, and would humbly dedicate these volumes to your Lordship.

Dedication.

I should be rejoiced to hope, that this work may seem to approve itself to your Lordship's judgment, as answering in some degree, though imperfectly, the end at which I have aimed ; namely, the illustration of our Common Prayer Book from ancient documents, and its original sources.

I pray that it may please God, long to bless your Lordship with every spiritual and good gift : and I am, with feelings of deep respect and attachment,

My Lord,

Your most faithful and obliged servant,

WILLIAM MASKELL.

CHAPTER I.

HE consecration of sovereigns by the ministers of religion, reaches to an antiquity higher than the Christian æra : but I need not enter here into the history of the unction and coronation of the ancient Jewish kings. The accounts which we have in the Sacred Scriptures will readily occur to the recollection of the reader ;<sup>1</sup> and if he would enquire further, there are many writers who, having investigated that part of the subject, will afford him very full information upon it.<sup>2</sup>

S. Augustine has declared that the anointing of kings was a rite always peculiar to the people of God : and not adopted at any time by the heathens. “ Unctus est,” he says, “ Deus a Deo : unctum audis, Christum intellige : etenim Christus a chrismate. Hoc nomen quod appellatur Christus, unctionis est : nec in aliquo alibi ungebantur reges et sacerdotes, nisi in illo regno,

Preliminary Dissertation.

Christus prophetabatur et ungebatur, et unde veneratum erat Christi nomen : nusquam alibi omnino, in nulla gente, in nullo regno.”<sup>3</sup>

We know not who was the first Christian prince, either anointed or crowned by the bishops of the Church. Theodosius the younger is supposed to have been the first, who was crowned by the patriarch of Constantinople ; and Habertus acknowledges that he cannot find any authority for such a solemnization before his time : A. D. 408. “ Nemo mihi a patriarcha coronatus legitur ante Theodosium jun. de quo Theodorus Lector, lib. 2. ὁ νέος Θεοδοσίος στεφθεὶς ὑπο τοῦ Πρώτου πατριάρχου.”<sup>4</sup> Shortly after the time of that emperor there appears to be little reason to question the fact, in the case of the emperor Justin : concerning whom Baronius quotes an epistle from John, the then patriarch of Constantinople : “ Ideo coronam gratiæ super eum cœlitus declinavit, ut affluenter in sacrum caput ejus misericordia funderetur : omnique annuntiationis ejus tempore cum magna voce Deum omnium Principem glorificaverunt, quoniam talem verticem manibus meis tali corona decoravit.”<sup>5</sup>

But before this date, we have the famous history of Clovis in the West, of whom it has been asserted, that he was both crowned, and anointed.<sup>6</sup> And more than

dence, that in the earliest coronations of the Greek emperors, unction formed a part of the solemnity. It has been supposed so : but the proof appears to rest upon an expression of Onuphrius, cited by Selden. “ Constantinopoli, vel sub Justiniano, vel post ejus statim obitum, electioni imperatoris addithis: that the ~~sacred oil was brought~~ down by an angel from heaven, for that purpose. The story however would prove too much, and as a result which may rather have been anticipated, the enquiry which has been made into the truth of the miracle, has cast more than doubt upon even the coronation of Clovis. For the evidence in proof of the miraculous oil, must be set down as worthless: the best authors of the sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth centuries, men who, one or the other, would have undoubtedly spoken of it, if it had been true, say not a word upon the matter: and until, at last, the legend begins to be heard of, the oil is mentioned in connexion, not with the coronation, but with the baptism of Clovis.<sup>7</sup> The writers of those ages immediately succeeding the supposed miracle, speak frequently of the chrism with which Clovis was anointed, and call it "holy" or "sacred chrism:" but this, in the same sense in which they would have spoken of all chrism, and not as having been in any way miraculously provided. Thus, to quote one of them, and

<sup>7</sup> The whole legend of the coronation of Clovis may be probably attributed to a perverted tradition of his baptism and confirmation: in the same way as it has been asserted, that our king Alfred was anointed king at Rome, by

Leo IV. In which latter case we have very considerable authority: viz. his contemporary Asser, Malmesbury, Hoveden, and others. But still it must be referred to his confirmation, which they relate did also take place: for it is scarcely credible that he should so long beforehand, as a child, with two elder brothers, and in his father's life-time, be anointed for a king. See Selden, Titles of Honour, p. 115. and the authors cited by him.

almost ~~at~~ contemporary: “Rex omnipotentem Dominum in Trinitate confessus, baptizatus est a sancto Remigio, in nomine Patris, etc.—et sacro chrismate delibutus cum signaculo crucis.”<sup>8</sup>

But towards the end of the ninth century, nearly four hundred years after the baptism of Clovis, an archbishop of Rheims, Hincmar, claimed for the holy oil the honour of having been miraculously sent down from heaven. I place his account in the note below:<sup>9</sup> and extract here from his Capitular the assertion, also first made by him, that Clovis was anointed with this to be emperor; he is speaking of Charles the Bald. “Sanctæ memoriæ pater suus Hludowicus pius, imperator augustus, ex progenie Hludowici (Clodoveum intelligit) regis Francorum inclyti, per beati Remigii Francorum apostoli catholicam prædicationem cum integra gente conversi, et cum tribus Francorum milibus, vigilia sancti Paschæ in Remensi metropoli bap-

mirifico super omnes odores, quos ante in baptisterio senserant, omnes qui aderant inestimabili suavitate repleti sunt. Accipiente autem sancto pontifice ipsam ampullulam, species columbæ disparuit. De quo chrismate fudit venerandus episcopus in fontem sacratum. Viso autem rex tanto miraculo, abnegatis diaboli pompis et operibus ejus, petiit se a sancto pontifice baptizari, etc. Et susceptus ab ipso pontifice de sacro fonte, perunctus est sacro chrismate, cum signo sanctæ crucis Domini nostri Jesu Christi.” Apud Surium, 13 Januarii.

Now, not only would we naturally look with some suspicion upon a history of an event, whether miraculous or not, so long after its supposed occurrence, but with that suspicion encreased, if it came from a quarter likely to be personally interested in the matter. Hincmar was archbishop of Rheims: and sixteen archbishops had occupied that see between S. Remigius and himself, of not one of whom can it be proved, that he had ever heard of such a miracle. But more than this: the account he gives us is full of errors: Hincmar says that Clovis was baptized in the metropolitan church; a contemporary of the king, Nicetius bishop of Treves, declares that it took place in the church of S. Martin:<sup>10</sup>—and again, that it was on the vigil of Easter Day; but another contemporary, Avitus, bishop of Vienna, declares that it was upon Christmas Eve.

So that, as the supposed history of the oil used at the coronation of the kings of France (that it was first provided from heaven for Clovis, and afterwards no less miraculously preserved, without wasting, at Rheims), rests upon no better or earlier authority than that of Hincmar in the ninth century, who was ignorant of the facts of the case, we must conclude that the whole is a mere story, unworthy of the least credit. Nor should I have delayed to examine it, even so shortly, had it not been for the general reception with which it has been received, and the attempts by some to prove, that on account of this miraculous oil, the French kings have a precedence over other sovereigns.

There appears to be sufficient evidence, that the rite of anointing, can be traced higher with respect to the kings and princes of England, than of any other country. And I do not see, how it could be disproved, if one was inclined to assert that the ceremony took its origin from our own forefathers; and was from them adopted into the ceremonial of other churches. For, not only are the coronation of Clovis, and his unction with any oil, though not miraculous, incapable of being substantiated, but it has been confessed by very learned writers, that Pepin, in the eighth century, was the first French king who was anointed. Thus, Selden says; "the first testimony that is worthy of credit for any unction of their kings, is that which the stories have of king Pepin. So say Regino, Sigebert, Siffridus, and enough others of the antients."<sup>11</sup> And Chiffletius; "Pipinus omnium Franciæ regum primus, imitatus Judæorum reges, ut se sacra unctione venerabiliorem augustioremque faceret, semel atque iterum ungi voluerit."<sup>12</sup>

I extract also the following from Martene, whose judgment, learning, and candour, upon every question which he has investigated, are equally to be praised. "Longe tardius in Galliis reges solennem episcoporum benedictionem suscepisse videntur, quippe ante Pippinum qui Suessione a Moguntino archiepiscopo Bonifacio unctus est in regem, nullus ab episcopis benedictus legitur: sed omnes ut regni imperium adepti erant, a populis clypeo eveci, reges constitutebantur. Observat Mabillonius, post Valesium, solitos tum fuisse Francorum optimates ad constituendum regem convenisse, singulosque in electi verba jurasse,

But before the coronation of Pepin, the pontifical of archbishop Egbert was the service-book of at least traditaeque in manum hasta pro sceptro, excelso in solio honorifice imposuisse." De ant. ecc. rit. tom. 2. p. 212.

D'Achery, in the Spicilegium, has printed an ancient treatise upon the office and duties of kings, addressed to Pepin by Jonas, bishop of Orleans at that time. It is entitled "Opusculum de institutione regia." Tom. 1. p. 327. In the same collection, is another treatise of a like kind, written by Smaragdus, an abbot, in the vijth century: the "Via regia." ibid. p. 238. Both these deserve the attention of the student.

About the same time, in England, A. D. 785, the famous council of Chalcuith devoted two canons to the exposition of the duties incumbent upon kings: viz. the xith "De officio regum:" and the xijth "De ordinatione et honore regum." Concilia. tom. 1. p. 148.

There is a book which has obtained, most unworthily, the credit of a considerable reputation, namely, a history of the ceremonies of French coronations by "Monsieur Menin, counsellor to the parliament of Metz." 8vo. 1727. I regret to have seen it mentioned, without condemnation, by so respectable an author, as Mr. Taylor, in the preface to his "Glory of Regality:" a work which exhibits some amount of enquiry. However, this M. Menin sums up his history in these words: and I need scarcely explain to the reader that he has expressed his belief in the miraculous oil of Clovis. "The kings of France have not only the happiness of being the first converts to the Christian faith, but they have likewise the advantage to derive only from God himself the institution of the ceremony of their anointing, which has been conveyed down to other Christian princes, many ages after, from their pattern." p. 201.

I cannot conclude this note, without extracting upon the subject of it, important as it is, the opinion of the learned ritualist, Catalani: and I the rather do so, as the reader's attention will be drawn by the passage, to another case, upon which I do not think it necessary to enter further; I mean, the benediction of Aidan, by S. Columba. Catalani says: "Certe Edmundus Martenius, ubi agit de solemnibus regum benedictionibus, floccipendens fabulosam Clodovei unctionem, ingenue fatetur, antiquissimam omnium benedictionem regum, quas inter legendum ipsi reperire licuit, eam fuisse, quæ a Columba facta est jussu angeli in Aidanum Scotorum regem, cuius meminit Cumethat part of the Constitution which he was placed, and the use of the same in the year 726, see below, is especially remarkable as a part of the solemnity of coronation, and has continued from that time, during the existence of the British Church, we have the testimony of Julius the Emperor, reges, et non per Deum, sed qui per nos imperatores existant; et post ad unumquisque per nos sui examinatione, mundanitate, et sacrosanctis mysteriis."

This place in Julius is certainly, as Selden urges) not open to any objection which might be brought, from the use of a phrase of later interpretation and meaning than the fact signified, as in the relation by Malmsbury of the coronation of Egbert in the year 756, the use of which has since come down to us. He writes a ceremony had become a settled part of the solemnity: and says speaking of Ofa, the father of Egbert; "dedit vitam consumpsit, etiam et Egfertum illum, ante mortem suam, in regem imperatorem, successorum dimisit." And even as regards this expression as used by Malmsbury, it is an argument of very great

Quis veritas plane inveniunt, jam antea reges ordinatos fuerat." The sentence from Marten, which I have given above, is then quoted, and Catalani continues "Id ipsum tradit alius scriptor Gualterus Franciscus Pagius in vita S. Zachariae Pape, ubi ita scribit: 'Et quidem Pippinus videtur esse primus ex Francorum regibus, qui unctus est in regem.' weight, in favour of its strict interpretation, that the Saxon Chronicle employs the same phrase: and declares that Egferth was "hallowed to king:" "ꝥ Ec3vepð to cyninze 3ehal3oð." This is the earliest coronation alluded to in that chronicle; in other instances the accession only is mentioned;<sup>15</sup> and I do not see any reason why we should not conclude that unction, in its proper sense, as ordered by the pontifical of Egbert, formed one of the solemn rites of the first known English coronation.

Having thus spoken somewhat of unction, as connected with the records, real or pretended, of the most ancient coronations, it will be as well to collect here some more observations bearing upon that important part of the solemnity.

We have a very remarkable proof of the view in which the anointing of kings was regarded in the thirteenth century, as explained and insisted on, by the highest ecclesiastical authority at that time recognized in this country, in a letter from pope John XXII. to Robert Bruce, king of Scotland. After speaking of some of the duties incumbent upon kings, he thus proceeds: "— ad quæ utique perfectius exercenda, iidem reges unctionis sacræ virtute, quam per venerabiles Dei ministros antiquo more suscipiunt, donum gratiæ recipiunt potioris, ut et in prosecutione justi regiminis fortius convalescant, et tam in se, quam in eorum subditos prudentiori et sanctiori spiritu dirigantur. Vehemens namque est in iisdem regibus hujusmodi efficacia unctionis. Nam inuncto Saule, insiliit Spiritus Domini super eum, et in virum alterum est mutatus; et in David, unctione suscepta, Spiritus Domini est directus: ad insinuandum quoque, quod in regibus esse debeat plenitudo virtutum, et integra domini temporalis auctoritas.”<sup>16</sup>

Before this, archbishop Thomas Becket had written to king Henry II. to this effect: “Inunguntur reges in capite, etiam pectore et brachiis, quod significat gloriam, sanctitatem, et fortitudinem.”<sup>17</sup> And not long after, Robert Grossetest, bishop of Lincoln, to Henry III. “Quod autem in fine literæ vestræ nobis mandastis, videlicet quod intimaremus quid unctionis sacramentum videatur adjicere regiæ dignitati, cum multi sunt reges qui nullatenus unctionis munere decorentur, non est nostræ modicitatis complere hoc. Tamen non ignoramus quod regalis inunctio signum est prærogativæ susceptionis septiformis doni Sacratissimi Pneumatis, quo septiformi munere tenetur rex inunctus præeminentius non unctis regibus omnes regias et regiminis sui actiones dirigere: etc.” Selden, who bishop of Prague in the preceding century. But this does not affect the reason for which I have quoted it.

quotes this from a MS. observes, and not rightly, that the bishop was answering as if his mind had been only on the unction given in confirmation.

It was from having been anointed with the sacred oil that our kings have received the style “Dei gratia :” which, as an old author of the 14th century, cited by Selden,<sup>18</sup> tells us, could not be given to any one else of the laity. “Nota, quod nullus potest proprie uti isto verbo Dei Gratia, qui in laicali positus est dignitate, nisi sit imperator vel rex vel alter qui sui capitis recepit unctionem. Nam tales ununtur oleo sancto; et in rege potest dici evidentissime per exemplum.” And this affords an additional, though incidental, proof how early the rite of unction had become a fixed form, in the coronation of the Saxon kings, not only in the north, as is shewn by the pontifical of archbishop Egbert, but in the west of England. For Ina’s ecclesiastical laws, A.D. 700, commence with this style: “Ego Ina Dei gratia occiduorum Saxonum rex.”<sup>19</sup>

Selden also cites and remarks upon the rule laid down in the “old Provinciale Romanum,” as to the number of sovereign princes, who were entitled to be anointed: and although the copies vary, some having four kings named, and others less, yet, as he concludes, the true reading of the rule was, that the kings of England, Jerusalem, France, and Sicily, were alone so entitled. It would seem from Hostiensis, (who, by the way, names only England and France,) in the place just cited in the note, that when the kings of other countries desired to be anointed, special permission was to be obtained from the see of Rome: "si quis de novo inungi velit, consuetudo obtinuit, quod a papa petatur, sicut fecit rex Aragonum, et quotidie instat rex Scotiae." Regarding the case of the king of Scotland, the bull mentioned above, was directed to him, on such an occasion: and we have in Matthew Paris an instance of a legate sent to anoint Haco, king of Norway, in 1247. "Applicuit similiter in Anglia episcopus Sabinensis, iturus in partes boreales legatus, —et regem Norwegiae Haconem in regem inuncturus et coronaturus."<sup>20</sup>

The anointing was always held to confer sacredness upon the person of the sovereign: and for this we have the authority of S. Augustine, who speaks however of the earlier unction of the Jewish kings: but the argument is the same. "Quæro, si non habebat Saul sacramenti sanctitatem, quid in eo David venerabatur? Si autem habebat innocentiam, quare innocentem persequebatur? nam eum propter sacrosanctam unctionem, et honoravit vivum, et vindicavit occisum: et quia vel panniculum ex ejus veste præcidit, percusso corde trepidavit. Ecce Saul non habebat innocentiam, et tamen habebat sanctitatem, non

<sup>20</sup> Hist. Angl. p. 637. Matthew Paris mentions this again. "Anno sub eodem—coronatus est rex Haco, et in regem inunctus solemniter apud Bergas." p. 648. And the same mode of expression is used by Matthew of Westminster: "Die vero sanctorum Felicis etc., inunctus et coronatus est in regem princeps Norwegiae Haco." Flores Hist. edit. 1601. p. 340. Either this was then thought an unusual case, or the king of Norway is to be added to the number of the ancient anointed kings: which last is scarcely probable, from the fact of the legate, who was sent to crown him.

vitæ suæ (nam hoc sine innocentia nemo potest) sed sacramenti Dei, quod et in malis hominibus sanctum est.”<sup>21</sup>

The reader will observe that S. Augustine calls the regal unction in the above passage, a sacrament: nor, relying upon his authority, does there appear to be any objection to the use of so high a term, in the same wide sense in which we speak of the sacrament of orders, or of marriage. So also S. Gregory the Great says expressly: “Quia vero ipsa unctio sacramentum est, is qui promovetur, bene foris ungitur, si intus virtute sacramenti roboretur.”<sup>22</sup> “Rex unctus,” says Lyndwood, “non mere persona laica, sed mixta secundum quosdam.”<sup>23</sup> But this anointing must not be

<sup>22</sup> Expos. lib. 1. Regum cap. x. Balsamon, in his scholis on the 12th canon of the council of Ancyra, has not feared to go much further, as to the effects of this unction. But his interpretation of the canon is condemned, and very justly, by all later writers on the subject. He says: “Præsenti canone usus ille sanctissimus patriarcha dominus Polyeuctus:—dixit enim cum sancta synodo, in synodalibus actis quæ tunc habita fuerunt, quæ in Charaphylacio reponuntur, quod quoniam sancti baptismatis unctio omnia, quæ ante baptismum fuerunt, qualia et quantacunque sunt, peccata delet; omnino imperatoris quoque unctio cædem delevit.” Bevereg. Pandect. Tom. 1. p. 385. The case alluded to is that of the Emperor John Tzimisches, who had slain his predecessor.

looked upon, neither ever has it been, as conferring any sacerdotal right or privilege: the sovereigns of England are supreme in all cases whether ecclesiastical or civil, as in the one, so in the other,<sup>24</sup> both before and after the solemnity of the coronation; nor are their prerogatives increased by its performance, or hindered by its delay: and as before they have no power, so neither after the regal unction have they any right or authority, to minister the sacraments, or the Word of God.<sup>25</sup>

Before we proceed to other matters connected with the service of the coronation, I must take notice, that in this country also as well as in France, the posses-

nation is over, and the offertory concluded: "Imperator pontificem ad altare descendentem sequitur, et illi in locum subdiaconi calicem, et patenam cum hostiis offert, deinde aquam infundendam in vino." Lib. 1. p. 25. edit. Rom. 1560. But this would seem to be a relic from those earlier times when actual offerings and oblations were made by all the laity, at the celebration of the Holy Eucharist. The reader should consult however Thomas-sin, de Benef. Pars. 1. lib. 3. cap. lxiv., in which place he will find full information about another custom, introduced and common in many nations, that the newly consecrated prince should be admitted a canon of some cathedral church. sion of a miraculous oil has been claimed, and use made of it upon at least one occasion. If it should be thought that the evidence for this miracle is little better than that, before examined, of K. Clovis, I shall not argue against such an opinion, but leave the reader to form his own conclusion.

The facts, if they may be so called, are as follows, in the words of Walsingham. “Die translationis sancti Edwardi regis et confessoris, coronatus est rex Henricus IV.,—unctus est illo cœlesti unguento, quod olim beata Maria, mater Dei, commisit beato Thomæ martyri arch. Cantuar. dum esset in exilio conservandum, prædicens eidem, quod reges Anglorum, qui ungerentur hoc unguento, pugiles essent ecclesiæ, et benigni. Hoc unguentum in aquila aurea et ampulla lapidea conservatum latuit per multa tempora, sed tandem miraculose manifestatum. Dum dominus Henricus primus dux Lancastriæ bella gereret regis sui in partibus transmarinis, ipsi nempe tradita fuit prædicta aquila per quendam sanctum virum, qui illum invenerat revelatione divina. Qui dedit eam nobilissimo principi Edwardo, ut in ea unctione post mortem patris ungeretur in regem. Qui posuit in turri Londoniarum unguentum præfatum, recludens in cista multis firmata securis, latuitque ibi vel per oblivionem, vel per negligentiam, usque ad tempus Richardi regis II. Anno Domini prædicto 1399, prædictus rex Richardus curiose perscrutatus res a progenitoribus sibi relictas, inopinato reperit aquilam et ampullam, et scripturam B. Thomæ. Et cum didicisset virtutem talem unctionis, rogavit dominum Thomam Cant. arch. ut eum denuo ungeret hoc unguento. Qui hoc facere omnino recusavit, dicens sibi sufficere, quod semel per manus suas sacram suscepit in coronatione præcina unctionem, quæ habere non debuit iterationem. Hanc aquilam cum ampulla rex Richardus portavit in Hiberniam, profecturus et denuo rediens in hanc terram. Quam petenti archiepiscopo tradidit, dicens se jam patenter clarescere, quod non fuit voluntatis divinæ, ut ungeretur illo unguento, sed alteri deberi tam nobile sacramentum.”<sup>26</sup>

In this story an assertion is said to have been made by the archbishop, which, supposing there was any truth in the matter, all parties must have known to be a falsehood: “quod semel per manus suas sacram suscepit unctionem, quæ habere non debuit iterationem.” For there is no fact more certain than that many of our early kings were crowned more than once.<sup>27</sup> To name no more, Henry II., of whom Hoveden tells us, speaking of his third coronation, “Anno gratiæ 1159, idem rex Henricus tertio fecit se, et Alienor uxorem

<sup>26</sup> Hist. Angl. p. 360. Cf. Ypodigma Neustriæ, p. 555. And a MS. in the Cotton library. Faust. B. ix. It is obvious that this legend was invented in order to supply an hereditary defect, and give additional sacredness to the character of K. Henry IV.: whose doubtful title required something of that kind: and the assertion that his unfortunate predecessor had not been able to obtain unction with the same oil, is a curious circumstance in the tale. I may add, that another version of the same legend is given by Weever, from an old Leiger Book, of the abbey of Whalley. Funeral Monu- ments. p. 200. Weever may generally be relied on, as to his quotations, but he is both an ignorant and an unsafe writer when he does not refer to, or transcribe his authorities.

The rabbinical writers declare, that the ancient Jewish kings were, in like manner, anointed with a holy oil, which had originally been consecrated by Moses, and kept without diminution about 900 years, until the captivity.

<sup>27</sup> Pepin also, of France, was anointed twice: first by S. Boniface, the legate; and again, by the pope himself, Stephen II.: Charlemagne, five times, and Charles the Bald, four times.

de posuerunt coronas suas, et eas super altare obtu-lerunt; voventes Deo, quod nunquam in vita sua de cætero coronarentur.”<sup>28</sup> Henry III. also, first at Gloucester, in the year 1216: concerning which Matthew Paris, though he begins by speaking “de prima regis Hen. III. coronatione, quæ per quendam circulum aureum facta sit;” expressly declares, that there was no distinction made as to the anointing: “Et his ges-tis,” he continues, “episcopi, ipsum in regem ungentes, coronaverunt solemniter.”<sup>29</sup> And the mass, and royal banquet followed, as was always customary. His second coronation was performed at Westminster, by the archbishop, in 1220: “præsente clero et populo totius regni.”<sup>30</sup>

IV. p. 92. pars posterior.* A somewhat similar instance of humility is that of Canute, who, after the well-known rebuke of his courtiers at Southampton, would not wear his crown: “Sed super caput crucifixi Wintoniæ posuit.” Henr. de Knyghton de event. Angliæ. Lib. 1. cap. v. The same is stated by Henr. Huntingdon, p. 364, cit. Alford. Annal. Tom. 3. p. 492.

“Super imaginem Domini, quæ cruci affixa erat.” In the account given by Gervase, of the second coronation of Richard I., it would seem that the unction was omitted. Script. x. Tom. 1. p. 1587.

There was also a tale attached to a ring of S. Edward: which

It is probable that our kings anciently knelt during the rite of unction, though I do not remember any express order to this effect earlier than the time of Henry VII. "The cardinal sitting, shall anoynte the king, kneeling."<sup>31</sup> So also, in the "devyse" for the coronation of Henry VIII.<sup>32</sup> which I shall have frequent occasion to quote: "The seid cardynall sitting shall annoynthe the king knelyng on quysshyns." On the other hand, it is to be remarked, that in the magnificent MS. of the coronation service of Charles V. of France,<sup>33</sup> the illuminations represent the king, standing, at the anointing of the breast: whilst he kneels, with his vestment unlaced, during the prayers which immediately precede, and kneels again to be anointed on the hands.

After the anointing of the head, a linen coif or was taken from his finger by the Confessor, says the Golden Legend, on an occasion when he had no other alms to bestow, "ne hys amener was not present," and given to a poor man, who afterwards proved to be S. John the Evangelist, and who returned the ring. This is gravely related by Ailred, Script. x. Tom. 1. p. 398, and by Hoveden in his Annals, edit. Savile. p. 256. Some writers make this ring to have been the one anciently used at coronations: but I do not see upon what grounds. For not only is it certain that such a ring was not always used, if ever; but also that the coronation ring was sometimes afterwards but little regarded. Thus, a royal order of Henry VI., concerning some jewels, mentions, "A ryng of gold, garnysbed with a fayr rubie, sometyme geven unto us by our bel oncle the cardinal of Englande, with the whiche we were sacred in the day of our coronacion at Parys, delivered unto Matthew Phelip, to breke, and thereof to make an other ryng for the Quene's wedding ring." chrismale was put on : and, as the reader will see in the notes to the Service below, this was ordered to be worn for seven days, and on the eighth to be removed by a bishop, or the abbot of Westminster, with the celebration of a proper mass. Ducange does not seem to have been aware of this use of the chrismale, as he explains its purpose only as another name for ampullæ, or coverings for relics, besides its more common acceptation with respect to the newly confirmed: of which I have already spoken in another part of this work.<sup>34</sup> In the old account of the coronation of Henry VI. we find, after the anointing: "And then they leyd a certeyn softe thyng to all the places so annoynted. And on his hede dyd a white coyfe of silk, and so he went and lay viij dayes. And thè viijth daye they shuld washe it of hym." Also in the "Devyse" for Henry VIII. "He shall put vpon the kyng's hed a coyfe, the same to be broughte to the grete chamberlayne: whiche shall contynuelly abyde on the kings hed to the viijte daye next folowing, at whiche viij. dayes, after a solempne masse seyde by a Bisshop before the king, the seid Bishop shall take the coyf from the kyng's hed."

The consecration of chrisam having, since the reformation, been discontinued, holy oil only has been used in succeeding coronations. I am quite unable to say by whom, or according to what office, the benediction of this oil has been performed, on late occasions.

'his crism-lyng was set on his hed,' that is, his chrismal was taken off at Wedmore." Glory of regality. p. 193.

Sandford asserts in his account of James II.'s coronation,<sup>56</sup> that the dean of Westminster, "early in the morning, with the assistance of the prebendaries, consecrated the holy oil for their majesties anointing:" but he supplies no particulars. Mr. Taylor<sup>56</sup> gives his decision, unsupported by any proof, that "it is of course set apart for the purpose to which it is designed with suitable acts of reverential solemnity:" and somewhat quaintly adds, "The formulary of its consecration hath not I believe been published." I do not feel obliged to offer any guesses upon what has hitherto, since the sixteenth century, been the practice: nor to state whether I believe or not, with Mr. Taylor, that the holy oil has been always beforehand set apart with "suitable acts of solemnity." I hope such has been the case. But I would express a wish, that when any future occasion demands a revision of our coronation order,—(from the necessity of which I earnestly trust and pray that God, of His goodness, may long preserve us)—a prayer of benediction of the oil may be inserted, to be said by the archbishop, or some bishop, after the service itself has commenced. It is not seemly, nor according to any ancient precedent, that it should be entrusted to the dean of Westminster, being an episcopal prerogative and duty.<sup>57</sup>

<sup>57</sup> I would observe that the whole of the above paragraph, is founded upon the supposition that the consecration of the oil is not performed by the archbishop when he says the prayer "O Lord, holy Father," and "lays his hand upon the ampulla." I do not mean to say that a designation of the oil to its particular purpose does not then take place, but that there is scarcely, what both theologians and ritualists would call, a consecration of it. The oil is Here seems to be the proper place to remark upon a ceremony, which, in the late coronations of Queen Adelaide, and her present Majesty, has not been observed. I mean the anointing of the breast. This rite had been practised for nearly 800 years, for it does not appear to have been introduced until after the Conquest. The Roman pontifical did not adopt it: and for this reason, if for no other, it is to be regretted that it has been, for a season, omitted; namely, because it appears to have been a solemnity peculiar to the Queens of England and France. I have been informed that it was not observed from a feeling of delicacy.

I would describe the mode of its ancient performance, from the illuminations in the coronation book of Charles V. of France. The second represents the Queen kneeling, with her robe laced; in the third, she is standing, surrounded and concealed by her ladies, whilst they unlace it; in the fourth, she kneels, her robe unlaced, before the archbishop; who anoints her, not with his finger, but with a golden reed or pencil; and in the mean-time, the ladies hold a thin veil before her.

It was from this anointing, whether upon the head or breast, or upon both, that our queens-consort are said, no less than kings, to be consecrated. As for example, Bromton in his chronicle, says of the queen of Henry I. "quam Anselmus die sancti Martini coronavit, et in afterwards called "holy oil," so that I do not correct my observations and argument in Vol. 1. p. cclv. It is a strong evidence against this prayer being to be considered the Form of Consecration of the oil, that it occurs in the same place in the order for K. James II. when, as Sandford expressly states, the solemnity of the consecration had previously been completed.

reginam Angliæ consecravit.”<sup>38</sup> This was so, from the earliest times of which we have any record: for, although it is well-known that for some period the Anglo-saxon queens were deprived of their dignity, in consequence of the crimes of Eadburga, in the beginning of the ninth century, yet there is reason to suppose that before that date they were crowned and anointed, as it is quite certain that from the time of Judith, the queen of Ethelwulf, and of the Order of K. Ethelred, they always have been.<sup>39</sup>

We find frequent allusion made in the old chronicles to the anointing of the queens of England, as well as of our kings, upon the breast: which evidently shews that it has been, since its adoption, looked upon as a very significant and solemn part of the ceremony. Thus, Grafton, in his account of Richard III. and queen Anne; “After diverse songes solemply song, they both discended to the high altare, and were shifted

Also Hoveden, edit. Savile. p. 268. “Quam Anselmus Dorobernensis archiepiscopus reginam consecravit.”

<sup>39</sup> Mr. Taylor, in his appendix, disputes the fact of the Anglo-saxon queens having been crowned, before the time of queen Judith: arguing from the circumstance, that no mention of their “coronation” is to be found, and that all the writers who relate the guilt of Eadburga, and the consequent abhorrence of the people, speak only of the royal dignity, and the title of Queen in general terms. But I would rather take the same view with the very learned writers Spelman, and Selden: who both understand the actual coronation of the Saxon queens to have been an established ceremony, and for a season interrupted. The strongest argument in favour of Mr. Taylor’s view, is one which he has not stated; viz. that the pontifical of Egbert does not give the Order for a Queen. I own this to be a difficulty, and leave the question to the judgment of the reader. He must consult the original passages in Asser, Florence of Worcester, Matthew of Westminster, and the Poly-chronicon, &c.

from their robes, and had diverse places open from the middle vward, in whiche places they were anointed.”<sup>40</sup> So, of the coronation of Anne Boleyn: “After she had rested a while, she descended down to the high altar, and there prostrate hir selfe, while the archbishop of Canturburie said certeine collects: then she rose, and the bishop annointed hir on the head, and on the brest, and then she was led vp again.”<sup>41</sup>

was performed in a very magnificent manner, at a lavish expense. Hence, the details of it are important. An original paper of Cromwell, in the treasury of the Exchequer, cited by Weever, (Fun. Mon. p. 512,) states, among the extraordinary expenses of the reign: “Item, his Highnesse hath been at a most costly charge for the coronation of Queen Anne.”

CHAPTER II.

I SHALL now extract some accounts of the early coronations of our kings: if two or three of these seem to be long, the reader will be repaid by the light which they throw upon the Service itself, which will follow; and by the force of the evidence which they furnish to the constant observance of the more important parts of the solemnity. I shall not give notices of every reign, but those only which will be sufficient to bring down the facts, in one unbroken line, from the eighth to the sixteenth century.

The coronation and anointing of Egferth have been already spoken of: in the year 795, the Saxon chronicle relates that Eardwulph, king of Northumberland, was “consecrated and raised to his throne by Eanbalde, archbishop, and other bishops.”<sup>1</sup> In the next century, we have a very important account, by a contemporary, of the coronation of Edmund, king of the East Angles: “Anno dominicæ incarnationis 856, Nunberchus antistes unxit oleo, consecravitque in regem Eadmundum gloriosissimum.”<sup>2</sup> In the succeeding century, Walingford in his chronicles relates the celebrated story of Dunstan and K. Edwin; which he thus prefaces: “Verum in ipsis primordiis regni, videlicet ipso die unctionis ejus, qualis futurus rex foret, demonstravit.

Cui enim post coronationem et missarum solemnia, ut tantæ solemnitati congruit, etc.”<sup>3</sup> Once more; the coronation of king Ethelred, the Ordo of which will be so frequently referred to below, is thus spoken of: “Cui frater ejus Ethelredus, in regnum successit, et a sancto Dunestano aliisque Anglorum episcopis, inungitur et consecratur.”<sup>4</sup>

Reminding the reader that accounts of the intermediate inaugurations and consecrations are to be found in the various chronicles, some giving one detail, some another,<sup>5</sup> I shall pass on to the coronation of K. Richard I. : of which we have full descriptions in both Matthew Paris, and Hoveden. The following is from the latter author, a contemporary.

chiepiscopus post Agnus Dei corporis et sanguinis Salvatoris sacramenta conficeret, osculum pacis quod in populo dare sacrosancta consuevit ecclesia oblivioni penitus traditum est.” Ibid. p. 1940. Both these authors relate the following, which may not improperly be added here, though it is not said to have occurred at his coronation. “Rex autem Stephanus sub tantis æstibus missam interim solemnem audiebat, Alexandro episcopo tunc celebrante; in cujus manibus ce-reus quem rex ex more solito obtulit, confractus est; quod signum fuit confractionis regis. Pixis etiam cum eucharistia fracta cathena super altare cecidit, et hoc fuit signum regniæ ruinæ.” Ibid. 1030. 1352. And in Hoveden. Annals, edit. Savile. p. 278.

dewinus Cantuarensis archiepiscopus infundens oleum sanctum super caput ejus, unxit eum in regem, in tribus locis, videlicet in capite, in pectore, et in brachiis; quod significat gloriam, et fortitudinem, et scientiam, cum orationibus ad hoc constitutis. Deinde posuit idem archiepiscopus supra caput ejus consecratum pannum lineum, et pileum desuper. Deinde induerunt eum cum vestimentis regalibus. Deinde tradidit ei idem archiepiscopus gladium regnum. Deinde duo comites calciaverunt ei calcaria. Deinde indutus est manta. Deinde ductus est ad altare, et ibi prædictus archiepiscopus prohibuit ei, ex parte omnipotentis Dei, ne hunc honorem sibi assumeret, nisi in mente haberet, supradicta sacramenta et vota quæ fecerat inviolabiliter servare; et ipse respondit, se per auxilium Dei omnia supradicta servaturum sine fraude. Deinde ipse cepit coronam de altari, et tradidit eam archiepiscopo, et archiepiscopus posuit eam super caput illius, quam duo comites sustinebant propter ponderositatem ipsius. Deinde tradidit ei archiepiscopus sceptrum regale, in manu dextra, et virgam regalem, in manu sinistra; et rex sic coronatus ductus est ad sedem suam, a prædictis Dunelmensi et Bathoniensi episcopis, præcedentibus eos ceroferariis et prædictis tribus gladiis. Deinde inchoata est missa dominicalis, et cum perveniretur ad offertorium, prædicti episcopi duxerunt eum ad altare, et ipse obtulit unam marcam auri purissimi. Talis enim oblatio decet regem in singulis coronationibus suis. Et præfati episcopi reduxerunt eum ad sedem suam. Celebrata autem missa, et omnibus rite peractis, prædicti duo episcopi, unus a dextris, et alter a sinistris, reduxerunt eum coronatum, et portantem sceptrum in dextra, et virgam regalem in sinistra, ab ecclesia usque in thalamum suum, præcedente ordi-nata processione, ut superius. Deinde reversa est processio in chorum, et dominus rex deposuit coronam regalem et vestes regales; et leviores, coronam et vestem cepit, et sic coronatus venit prandere; et archiepiscopi et episcopi sederunt cum eo in mensa, unusquisque secundum ordinem et dignitatem suam. Comites autem et barones serviebant in domo regis, prout dignitates eorum exigebant. Cives vero London. servierunt de pincernaria, et cives Winton. de coquina.”<sup>1</sup>

The ceremonies which took place at the coronation of Richard II. are so fully described by Walsingham, that he seems but to have made an abridgment of the “Liber Regalis.” The following is the substance of his account of the solemnity: and I can assure the student, who wishes to understand the office itself, which I have edited, that he will do well to read it carefully, and compare the two. Walsingham mentions some particulars which the Ordo does not: and giving us a statement of what actually took place, he supplies also an admirable commentary and testimony to the Form which was appointed to be observed.

astiterunt, perduxerunt in ecclesiam S. Petri, cantantes antiphonam in honorem apostoli, cum oratione competenti adjuncta, et hac oratione: 'Deus humilium.' Rex vero mox ut altare pervenit, prostravit se solo tenus ante altare, pavimentum autem stratum fuit palliis et tapetis. Prosecula, ut diximus, oratione archiepiscopus, cum episcopis qui aderant, prostravit se super pavimentum circa regem. Interim duo episcopi litaniam devote cantarunt. Qua expleta erectus rex ductus est ad sedem suam: choro hanc antiphonam decantante, 'Firmetur.' Tunc episcopus sermonem fecit de materia regis et regni ad populum, qualiter rex se haberet in populo, et in quibus populus sibi debuit obedire. Et responsum est a plebetisono clamore, quod libenter sibi parere vellent. Archiepiscopus regem his orationibus benedixit, videlicet: 'Omnipotens.' Ista præmissa benedictio post primam orationem ad modum præfationis ab archiepiscopo cantabatur, qua cantata dicta est et alia oratio super eum, scilicet, 'Deus ineffabilis,' cum antiphona, 'Confortare.' Tunc archiepiscopus accessit ad eum, et vestimenta sua discindens manib. suis a summo usque ad imum, exiit eum præter camisiam vestimentis suis. Custodes vero. v. portuum ex officio tam in processione, quam in unctione et missæ, et post missam dum iret ad palatium ab ecclesia, semper tenuerunt umbraculum sericum magnum, coloris aerii, iv. hastis per quatuor angulos colligatum. Sed non obstante umbraculo supradicto, mox antequam

 nis perciperet sacramenta. Archiepiscopus (ut diximus) eo nudato unxit manus ejus de oleo sanctificato, unde uncti fuerunt reges et prophetæ, et sicut unxit Samuel Davidem in regem.—Item dixit orationem ‘Prospice.’ Post hæc unxit archiepiscopus caput ejus, et pectus, et scapulas, ambasque compages brachiorum, dicens: ‘Unguantur caput istud.’ Et interim chorus cantavit antiphonam, ‘Unxerunt.’ Postquam subjunxit metropolitanus, ‘Deus Dei Filius.’ Mox finita oratione archiepiscopus cum episcopis hymnum, ‘Veni Creator Spiritus,’ rege interim prostrato in longa venia, et circa eum metropolitano cum suffraganeis suis. Expleto hymno erectus est rex ab archiepiscopo, et indutus est primo tunica S. Ed. et post ejusdem dalmatica, projecta circa collum ejus stola, archiepiscopo orationes competentes interim prosequente. Post hæc archiepiscopus cum episcopis tradidit ei gladium, ita dicens: ‘Accipe gladium.’ Tunc duo comites cum gladio accinxerunt: quo facto archiepiscopus armillas dedit ei, dicens: ‘Accipe armillas.’ Postea induit eum archiepiscopus regali pallio, ita dicens: ‘Accipe pallium.’ Interim dum archiepiscopus benedixit coronam regiam, duo comites calcariaverunt, ad quorum officium pertinebat. Benedicta corona, archiepiscopus imposuit super caput, dicens: ‘Coronet te.’ Tunc dedit ei archiepiscopus anulum, cum his verbis: ‘Accipe anulum.’ Statim post hæc accessit dominus de Furnival, ex officio offerens ei rubeam chirothecam, quam archiepiscopus benedixit, et imposuit manui regiæ, dans ei sceptrum his verbis, dicens: ‘Accipe sceptrum.’ Tunc dedit ei archiepiscopus virgam in alia manu, habentem in summitate columbã, nam sceptrum quod suscepe-rat, consurrexit de rotundo globo aureo, quem tenebat in manu chirotheca, et habebat in summitate signum crucis, et accepit virgam prædictam cum verbis his: ‘Accipe virtutis.’ Post hæc benedictus est rex ab archiepiscopo ita dicente: ‘Benedicat te.’ His itaque peractis, osculatus est rex episcopos omnes et abbates, a quibus statim ductus est postea ad regale solium, episcopis inchoantibus hymnum, ‘Te Deum laudamus.’ Finito hymno, archiepiscopus ita eum allocutus est: ‘Sta et retine.’ His itaque peractis, inchoata est missa congruens coronationi regiæ.—Lecto evangelio, rex de regali solio ductus est ad offerendum. Primo igitur obtulit archiepiscopo gladium suum, quem susceperat, et postea aurum quantum placuit, sed non minus marca propter consuetudinem: nam plus potest offerre Deo et sancto Petro si placuerit. Post oblationem pecuniæ obtulit archiepiscopo panem et vinum ad modum monachorum, unde postea, tam metropolitanus, quam ipse rex, communicati fuerunt. Quo facto, comes, ad cujus officium pertinebat portare gladium coram rege, gladium quem obtulerat dato pretio redemit, et assumens eum, portabat coram illo. Percelebrata missa usque ad communionem, reductus est rex ad altare, et genuflexo coram archiepiscopo, dixit, ‘Confiteor.’ Quo absoluto, communicatus est, et iterum reductus est ad sedem suam.—Illico post decessum militis,<sup>9</sup> [Joannis Dymok] præequitantibus regem dominis supradictis super dextrarios suos, necnon præcedente magno numero diversi generis histrionum, portatus est in humeris

Of succeeding coronations there are few particulars which would illustrate further the Service which I have printed: three very curious and valuable manuscripts, in English, are extant, and preserved in the British Museum, from which I have made, as the reader will observe, many extracts in the notes, to elucidate the text. These manuscripts are entitled, 1st. "The maner and forme of the kyngis and quenes coronacion in Englonde;"<sup>10</sup> which it is not improbable was prepared for some particular occasion, but it does not appear what that was. 2nd. An account of the coronation of Henry VI.<sup>11</sup> And, 3rd, the "Devyse" for the coronation of K. Henry VIII. This last is especially valuable; having been carefully examined and approved by the king himself, who has made many corrections with his own hand in the oath which he was to take.<sup>12</sup> of the Dymocks, and before them, of the Kilpecks, see the Archæologia, vol. 20, p. 207, note b. and, for the oath which champions were to take in case of a duel, ibid. p. 170, note b. It has been supposed, from the error related above by Walsingham, that either the representative of the family of Dymock for the first time discharged the office at that coronation; or, that the ceremony had been omitted during some preceding reigns. It is a curious circumstance, that the widow of this Sir John Dymock was obliged many years after, to petition King Henry IV. for the fees due upon this occasion: and that the original petition is still extant. Cotton MS. Vitellius. C. xiv. 49. It is written on a slip of vellum.

There are some remarkable circumstances relating to the coronation of K. Edward VI., and I do not see any reason to doubt the assertion of bishop Burnet, that the Form was shortened; although it is not correct, unless mere omissions made it so, that "a new form was ordered to be drawn."<sup>13</sup> The chief document, of authority, which describes at length the order in which the coronation was to be observed, is "the Order" printed by Burnet in his records, Book 1. No. 4: from the council book. It cannot be denied that there were in the ancient service some few and short passages, which, after the dissolution of the abbeyes, would necessarily call for some alteration; but the reason which the council gave for shortening the ceremony, was not true, viz.: that he was too young to bear the fatigue of so long a ceremony: for he was older than his predecessors, Henry III. and Henry VI., and about one year younger than Richard II. Whatever the true cause may have been, the fact, that the service was mutilated and curtailed, does not seem to admit of dispute: and to a very considerable extent, if we place any reliance on the order of the council. For among other things omitted, it does not appear that Edward received investiture with the royal robe, or ring; or that he was even offered or presented with the sceptres of the realm of England. If one would object that this record from the council books is not to be interpreted so strictly, because it is not credible that so solemn a part of the ceremonies, as that regarding the sceptres, would have been struck out, I do not then see how he would prove that Edward VI. was not, as he ought to have been, completely crowned after the ancient manner and custom of his fathers. I leave the matter to the consideration of the reader.<sup>14</sup>

Queen Mary was crowned according to the old and full form of the Liber Regalis: Holinshed gives a very long description of the pageants, as she went to the Abbey; but of the service itself he merely states, that "the coronation and other ceremonies and solemnities were according to the old custome."<sup>15</sup> Archbishop Parker corroborates this, and says; "regina Maria missationibus sacrisque pontificiis, uncta regnoque initiata est."<sup>16</sup> Queen Elizabeth was also crowned according to the old rites, and with the celebration of the mass, omitting only the elevation of the host.<sup>17</sup>

I am indebted to a friend for a transcript also of a contemporary account of this coronation, (Harleian MS. 3504.) possibly drawn up by an eye-witness, in which it is asserted that the sceptres were delivered to the king, by two noblemen: and also, that he was anointed on the soles of his feet. I hesitate to place much reliance on this document, where it differs from the council-minute; and the writer, without intending it, might have both mistaken and misrepresented facts.

<sup>17</sup> Burnet, vol. 3. p. 762. It seems certain however that there was only one bishop present, Oglethorpe, of Carlisle: and Collier, speaking loosely, says that the solemnity "was performed according to ancient custom, and directed by the Roman pontifical." vol. 2. p. 412. The ancient custom was very different from the Roman order. But some modification of the old rubrics of the Liber Regalis must have unavoidably taken place, in consequence of the refusal of the bishops to attend. It has been said that the queen never forgot or forgave their resolution in this matter: see Ellis, Original Letters, 3rd Series, vol. 2. p. 324.

The new Form, new, that is, in its language more than in its order and details, was first used upon the occasion of the coronation of King James in 1603; and this, with some alterations, has been "the Coronation Service," up to the present day.

By a careful examination of the notes below, the reader will be able, I trust, to trace sufficiently for himself, the principal changes which have been made, from time to time, during the last two centuries: and for more exact enquiry, (these modern services being rather incidentally than truly within the proper limits of my subject) I must refer him to the Forms themselves, all of which are, I believe, still extant in our great libraries.<sup>18</sup>

<sup>18</sup> Besides the Bodleian and the British Museum, several Forms, not to be found elsewhere, are in the libraries of Lambeth, and of the dean and chapter of Westminster.

I do not enter into any account or history of the regalia: much information may be obtained from common books respecting them, such as Sandford, or Taylor, in the "Glory of regality." The regalia now used are not the ancient ones: those having been destroyed, and melted down, by order of the Long Parliament: among them, it is said, the genuine crown of K. Alfred. The modern crowns, sceptres, &c., were made for Charles II.

There is however one monument of antiquity remaining, the Coronation Chair. The legend is, that it is the stone on which the patriarch Jacob laid his head in the plain of Luz; that it was brought from Egypt to Spain; from thence to Ireland A. C. 700; carried to Scotland A. C. 800; and at last offered at the shrine of Edward the Confessor at Westminster by K. Edward I. Whatever amount of truth there may be in this, the remark is just, that "this is the antientest respected monument in the world, for though some others may be more antient as to duration, yet thus superstitiously regarded they are not." Toland, Hist. of the Druids, p. 104. The stone was reckoned among the Jewels of Scotland: thus, in the Wardrobe account of Edward the first, we find; "Jocalia remanentia in fine anni xxvij<sup>m</sup>. de jocalibus quæ fuerunt quondam regis Scocie inventis in castro de Edeneburgh anno xiv<sup>to</sup>, videlicet, Ciphus argenteus, &c. Una petra magna super quam reges Scocie solebant coronari." Liber quotidianus, 4to. p. 332. See also Chalmers' Caledonia, vol. 1. p. 468. cit. Glory of regality, p. 58. The first chair was made by Kenneth of Scotland, in the ninth century: and Edward I. ordered a new chair, for the payment of which a considerable sum is entered in the Wardrobe accounts of the year 1200.

There is no record of the first coronation at which the stone was used in England; probably by Edward II. And even if Edward I. did not specify the purpose to which it was, in after ages, to be put, it is not likely that his successors would either forget the old traditions about it, or neglect to secure to themselves the blessings which were promised to those, who should have the power and be entitled to be crowned on it. But it is not to be denied, (and the writers upon the regalia have not noticed this circumstance) that an early authority, Thomas Walsingham, says that Edward deposited it at Westminster, for the use of the celebrant at the Confessor's shrine. His statement is; "In redeundo autem transivit per ab-

Before the reformation, all the regalia, it is said, were kept at Westminster, under the care of the abbot and convent: and now, though deposited in the Tower, they are brought the evening before the coronation to the dean of Westminster, and are left after the ceremony in his charge, at the shrine of the Confessor. Rishanger in his Chronicle, speaking of the two sceptres being carried in procession by the abbot of Westminster, adds: "Hoc officium fecit abbas, non quia primus est inter abbates, sed quia regaliu insignium est repositorium locus suus." cit. Taylor. p. 92. But compare an order "thesaurario et camerariis de scaccario" to deliver up the golden eagle with the ampulla. An. 8. Henr. VI. Rymer. Fadera. tom. 4. pars. 4. p. 151. And again in 1220, a similar order "Petro de malo lacu," to bring the "regale, quod penes ipsum est apud Corff." Tom. 1. pars. 1. p. 81.

There is, however, one rem-

rious authors,<sup>19</sup> that I shall merely add one or two observations upon points, which I do not remember to have seen noticed elsewhere. Either in the rituals, nant of the ancient regalia, if I may so entitle it, still entrusted to the custody of the dean of Westminster: viz: the Liber Regalis. This most valuable volume, so often to be referred to below, is a thin folio, of 38 leaves of vellum. There are four illuminations in it, each occupying nearly a page, prefixed to the offices which correspond. 1. Of a king being crowned. 2. Of a king and queen crowned together. 3. Of a queen alone. 4. Of a king lying in state. These illuminations are executed upon a very rich ground of highly burnished gold, with scrolls, according to the fashion of that time, represented by minute punctures upon the surface. A fac-simile, with a description of the book is given by Mr. Westwood, in his Palæographia Sacra. The date of the manuscript cannot be later than the reign of Richard II., for whose coronation it has been supposed to have been written; but the illuminations represent a monarch much older than he was on that occasion, and the likeness must either therefore be conventional, or intended for his predecessor, Edward III.* or for himself in after-life. Whatever the fact may be, the intrinsic value and importance of the Liber Regalis is not affected; it still remains, "the Royal Book," the Book of the Royal Offices, to be performed and observed according to the Use of the Royal Church of Westminster, in the fourteenth century.

I would observe here, that an ancient privilege of the king, at his coronation, was to nominate a nun to be received into certain abbeys; for example, Shaftsbury, Wilton, and Barking. The forms are given in the Fœdera. Tom. 4. pars. iv. p. 152. 156.

* In which case, the book would have been written in his reign. And it is remarkable, that the chair in which the sovereign sits, is not of that character, which is attributed to the later years of Edward III., as being made by him, for the stone.

or in the historians, (in the first exactly, in the last in general terms) we can trace the oath and its successive changes, from the time of K. Ethelred, to the present day. The promises and oath of William the Conqueror, are thus related. In the chronicle of Walter Hemingford: "Requisitus Eborum archiepiscopus — ad tuenda, conservandaque jura et privilegia ecclesiastica eum solemniter sacramentis astrinxit."<sup>20</sup> More fully, by Hoveden: "— consecratus est honorifice, sed prius, ut idem archipræsul ab eo exigebat, ante altare S. Petri coram clero et populo, jurejurando promittens se velle sanctas Dei ecclesias, ac rectores earum defendere, necnon et cunctum populum sibi subjectum juste, ac regali providentia regere, rectam legem statuere, et tenere, rapinas injustaque judicia penitus interdicere."<sup>21</sup>

According to the modern Orders, it is expressly directed that the sovereign should sign the oath: and there is a remarkable passage in an epistle of Thomas a Becket to king Henry, which would seem to refer to a subscribed declaration or oath at his coronation. The archbishop is particularly alluding to that solemnity, and to the rite of unction. He reminds the king; "Inunguntur reges in capite, etiam pectore et brachiis, quod significat gloriam, sanctitatem, et fortitudinem.— Audiatur, si placeat, dominus meus, consilium servi sui, commotionem episcopi sui, castigationem patris sui, ne cum schismaticis habeat de cætero aliquam fami-liaritatem vel communionem, nec contrahat aliquid cum eis. Memoresque sitis professionis quam fecistis et posuistis scriptam super altare, de servanda ecclesiæ Dei libertate, quando in regem consecrati fuistis.”<sup>22</sup> And, a little before this time, Peter Damian has an observation, which will undoubtedly admit of an interpretation in support of the meaning, which the language of the archbishop appears to convey. He says, “inaugurandum regem manu propria jurare libertatem ecclesiarum.”<sup>23</sup>

Among the riches of the library of the British Museum is a manuscript, (Cotton, Tiberius A. ij.) of the highest interest. It contains a Latin version of the four Gospels: and the tradition is, that it originally belonged to K. Athelstan, and is the identical copy, upon which, for several centuries, the kings of England took the coronation-oath. A full account of the volume, with the evidence in its favour, has been ably drawn up and published by Mr. Holmes:<sup>24</sup> I cannot say the proof is very satisfactory; but one fact is certain, that, in consequence of its renown at that time, and after some enquiry (we must conclude) into its history, this book was used at the coronation of Charles I.<sup>25</sup> I think there is clear evidence, that in the 15th and 16th centuries, the coronation-oath was not taken, as perhaps very anciently, and now in modern days, only upon the Holy Evangelists. The English MS. Order, which I have before mentioned,<sup>26</sup> thus directs. “Moreovir the kyng shall make his ooth, in his co-

I extract also the form of the oath as it is appointed in English, to be taken, according to the "Devyse" for Henry VIII. And with this, generally, agrees the "Order" in the other English MS. 285.

"The sermon ended, if any such be, the cardynall and the kyng that is to be coronwed so sittynge as is abouessayd, the cardynall with an open and distincte voyce, shall aske the king vndre this forme:

'Will ye graunte and kepe to the people of England, the lawes and the custumes to theym, as of old tyme rightfull and deuoute kings graunted, and the same ratefye and conserue by your othe, and the spirituall lawes, custumes, and libertees graunted to the clergy and people by your noble predecessour and glorious kyng Seint Edward?'

"The king shall aunswer, 'I graunte and promytte.'

"And when the kyng before all the people hath promytted truly to graunte and kepe all the premysses, Then shall the seid cardynall open vnto hym the speciall Articles, whereunto the kyng shall be sworn: the same cardynall seyng as foloweth:

'Ye shall kepe after your strength and power to the Church of God, to the clergy and the people, hoole pees and goodely concorde.'

"The kyng shall aunswer: 'I shall kepe.'

"Ye shall make to be done after your strength and power equall and rightfull justice in all your Domes and Jugements, and discrecion with mercy and trouthe.

that the chief authorities all refer this "corporal oath" to the touching of the consecrated host, or the corporal within which it was placed.* But in thus limit-

"The king shall answer: 'I shall do.'

"Do ye graunte the rightfull lawes and custumes to be holden, and promytte after your strength and power such lawes, as to the honor of God shall be chosen by your people, by you to be strengthened and defended."

"The kyng shall answer: 'I graunte and promytte.'"

In the Cotton MS. Vespasian. C. xiv. is a copy of the oaths of fealty and homage to be taken by the spirituality and temporality of the realm; in French and English, of the latter end of the 14th century, the date of the Liber Regalis. I extract the English Form.

"Pour les seigneurs espirituels. Foiaultee. 'I shall be trewe and feythefull, and feith and trowth shall bere to yow our liege lord, y<sup>e</sup> kyng of England, and to yowre heires, kynges of England, of erthely worship, for to leue and deye ayeins all maner folc, and * * * * shalle be attendant to yowr nedis aftir my connyng and power, and kepe your conseil, and trewly knowlech and do the seruices due of the temporaltees of my Bisshopricke or Abbaye of N. whiche I clayme for to hold of yow, and to yow and to yowr comaundements as my-kel as falleth to me for my temporaltees, I shall be obeissant: so help me God, and all his halwes.

"Pour les serc<sup>tes</sup>. temporel. Homage. 'I becomee yowr liege man of lif and of leme, and erthely worship, feithe, and trowth, shall bere to yow, ayeins al maner of men y<sup>e</sup> may lieue and deye. So help me God, and all his halwes.'

"Pour les Dames. Homage. 'I do yow homage, liege, and faith, trowth and erthely worship, y shall bere to yow, a fore all other creatures, for y<sup>e</sup> landes and tenements the whiche I clayme to hold of yow my liege lord. So help me God, and all his halwes.'

* Johnson (Todd's edition) cites Brand's popular antiquities. "The phrase corporal oath is supposed to have been derived—not from the touching of the New Testament, or the bodily act of kissing it, but from the ancient use of touching the corporale, or cloth which covered the consecrated elements."

Richardson, in his very valuable dictionary, first cites Junius: "Corporale, quo Domini corpus, i, panem consecratum tegebant," and adds "corporal oath, from the custom of touching this corporal."

ing the meaning of it, they cannot but be in error, as may be proved from many passages in the mediæval English writers. For example, the following from Thorn's chronicle. "Forma fidelitatis faciendæ. Ego N. de C. juro ad hæc sancta Dei evangelia præstito corporaliter sacramento, quod fidelis ero, etc."<sup>29</sup> This may not be so clear as other examples: viz.: "Et hii omnes et singuli recognoscebant eundem ordinarium, — et ipso instanti sponte canonicam obedientiam in scriptis, et inspectis sacrosanctis evangeliiis eidem abbati corporaliter fecerunt."<sup>30</sup> Once more, the case of a certain vicar of Faversham, who refused to perform his duty, "post canonicam obedientiam pro vicaria sua ad sancta Dei evangelia corporaliter præstitam."<sup>31</sup>

Nor are there wanting numerous examples in the chronicles of the other form of taking the "corporal oath." I quote two of these from Walsingham. "Celebrata solemnî missa, dictoque ter Agnus Dei, adjecto Dona nobis pacem, dictus Carolus in præsentia prædictorum et aliorum plurium, dexteram super patenam, cum corpore dominico, et lævam super missale

<sup>30</sup> Ibid. p. 1976. Upon "inspectis sacrosanctis evangeliiis" it is well to quote Ducange: "id est, non tactis, sed coram ipsis, quemadmodum jurare solebant episcopi et sacerdotes: nam episcopi supra sacra jurare vetantur, in concilio Meldensi, an. 845." I cite also the following from the same author: "Per evangelia juraturos manus prius abluisse ex Chrysostomo refert

Suicerus in Thesaurò eccles. v. εὐαγγέλιον, ubi antiquum et usitatum per proposita evangelia jurandi morem probat ex Palladio ad Lausum. etc." Glossarium. v. Jurare inspectis sacrosanctis."

posuit, hæc verba proferens: Nos Carolus juramus ad sacrosancta corpus Domino et evangelia firmiter servare, etc."<sup>32</sup> The missal in this instance was evidently sworn upon, not as a missal or with any reference to the Te igitur, or Canon, but as containing the Gospels: and I cannot but conceive that other cases which have been produced of swearing "super Te igitur," or "super librum missalem," are to be understood in the same way, although Ducange seems to have supposed the contrary. Again, from Walsingham; a Carmelite friar, in the reign of Richard II. "obtento aditu ad regale colloquium, porrexit schedulam, jurans in sacramento corporis Christi, quod ipse eodem die celebrando confecerat, nullum verbum fore falsum, etc."<sup>33</sup>

I cannot agree with the authorities whom I have quoted in the note above, that the term "corporal oath" is to be traced to the corporale: because there is no evidence that that ornament was the thing touched, but, on the contrary, that it was removed, and the consecrated eucharist itself was touched. The two examples from Walsingham, especially the first, would have induced us to have concluded this: and I am able to refer to an illumination, of the very time of the reign of K. Richard II., which sets the question at rest. In the British Museum, among the Harleian MSS.<sup>34</sup> is a French metrical history of the deposition of that prince: in the course of it, the earl of Northumberland offers to take his corporal oath: "Then replied the earl, 'Sire, let the body of our Lord be consecrated. I will swear that there is no deceit in this affair; and that the duke will observe the whole as you have heard me relate it here.' Each of them devoutly heard mass: then the earl without farther hesitation made oath upon the body of our Lord."<sup>35</sup> There is a representation of this circumstance. The earl is kneeling before the altar, upon which are placed a gilt chalice, and below it the host, exposed; upon which last the earl places his right hand.<sup>36</sup> I hope that the reader will pardon this digression, and consider it not altogether foreign to the subject of my dissertation.

CHAPTER III.

IN the first rubric of the Liber Regalis, which forms the first appendix below to the Order of Coronation, there occurs the following passage: "provideatur quod in aula regia majori sedes eminens sit, pannis sericis et inauratis decenter ornata, super quam dictus rex regnaturus cum omni mansuetudine et reverentia elevetur."

This ceremony has been supposed to have been derived from the more ancient customs of the northern nations, and many curious particulars, especially some relating to Sweden, have been collected by Mr. Taylor: who continues thus: "Perhaps the point in our English ceremony which is most analogous to the Gothic elevations is that of our kings being anciently placed upon a seat in Westminster Hall, which was thence denominated the King's Bench. This ancient seat, which occupied the upper end of the great hall, was appropriated to the administration of justice by the sovereign in person, or by the judges of his court, to which it gave the title of the Court of King's Bench."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> "At the upper end of this hall, is a long marble stone of twelve feet in length and three feet in breadth. And there also is a marble chair, where the kings of England formerly sate at their coronation dinners; and, at other solemn times, the lord chancellor; but now not to be seen, being built over by the two courts of chancery and king's-bench." Stow: Survey of London. cit. Glory of Regality, p. 303. The chief point is here omitted in Stow's statement about the coronation-feast: the seat was used, as a ceremony, before, not after, the procession to the Abbey. It was

The same writer gives the following examples of the sovereign being placed in this chair. Of Richard II. from Rymer:<sup>2</sup> of Richard III, who according to Speed and Stow, went in great pomp unto Westminster hall, and there in the king's-bench court took his seat: as the Croyland chronicle relates; "se apud magnam aulam Westmonasterii in cathedram marmoream im-misit." And Grafton says more plainly of the same king, "he came downe out of the white hall into the great hall at Westminster, and went directly to the kings-benche."<sup>3</sup> To these I would add one more from Rastell, of Edward IV. "He was brought into Westmyster, and there toke possessyon of the realme. And syttyng in the seate royall, in the great hall of Westmyster, with his septer in his hande, a question was axed of all the people, yf they wolde admitte hym to continue as kynge: to the whiché, with one voyce, all the people cryed there, Ye."<sup>4</sup>

And these from the MSS. before cited, in the British Museum. "The King's see. Also it must be ordeyned that in the day of the kyng's coronacyon in the grete halle of Westmynster, the kyng's see bee rially ordeyned and tressid with clothis of silke and golde, and ryall quysshyns and tapets:—in the whiche the prynce shall sit abydyng the procession."<sup>5</sup> Again, the "Devysse" for Henry VIII. The actual communion of the sovereign, after the coronation, in the Abbey, requires one or two brief remarks. One point has been long doubtful in the modern coronation services: namely, whether the crown was to be removed before receiving the Holy Eucharist. In the order for George III. there was no rubric: and it is said, nor do I see any reason to doubt the fact, that when the king approached the altar, in order to receive the sacrament, he enquired of the archbishop, ‘Whether he should not lay aside his crown?’ That the archbishop asked the bishop of Rochester, but neither of them knew, nor could say, what had been the usual form. And the king, with his usual piety, determined within himself upon the fitting course which he should pursue: he took off his crown, and humbly laid it aside during the administration of the Sacrament. The archbishop (Secker) possibly had not examined any other Order than that immediately preceding, of George II. where, in like manner, no direction was given upon this matter: at least, it is certain that he took, and naturally, that Order for his guide; because the copy which he used is preserved at Lambeth, interlined and corrected with his own hand.

I have not been able to learn what was really the fact, at the coronations of K. George IV. and of William IV. and Queen Adelaide: there is no rubric in their Services regarding the removal of the crown before communion; and it is a curious circumstance, that some personages who were present, and close by, upon both occasions, assure me that they do not recollect whether the crown was laid aside or not.<sup>7</sup> But in the Order for the coronation of her present Majesty, as the reader will see below, there are these rubrics: and, at whose wish or recommendation soever they were at length introduced, we cannot but admire the reverence and religious feeling which thus set the question at rest, we may hope, for the future. “The Queen,” says the rubric, “descends from her throne—and goes to the steps of the altar, where, taking off her crown, she kneels down.” And again, the Holy Eucharist having been received, before the post-communion; “The Queen then puts on her crown, and taking the sceptres in her hands again, repairs to her throne.”

As regards the coronations before that of George II. we know that there was no celebration of the holy

<sup>7</sup> A thin folio volume was published in 1821, with the official “imprimatur” of the lord “Howard of Effingham, acting for the earl marshal of England,” entitled, “The Ceremonies to be observed at the royal coronation of his most excellent majesty, K. Geo. IV.” I should be inclined to suppose that these ceremonies were, as much as possible, observed, but I cannot state exactly what authority this document had, in opposition to the order of the Service itself. But, upon the section headed “The holy sacrament,” it says “— his majesty will then descend from the throne, and go to the altar, where, taking off his crown, his majesty, etc.” And again: “— at the conclusion — the king will put on his crown, etc.”

The kings of France and the successors have long been permitted to communicate in both kinds, upon the solemnity of their coronation, and probably this which has in modern times been taken away from them is a concession of a Pope, and not a part of the Constitution, but a continuance, which they do not suffer interruption in their case, if that ancient right which all Christians once enjoyed, and to the King was unhappily taken from them. It is not true that this privilege, from the twelfth to the sixteenth century, was claimed by the kings of England: the evidence seems against it. Grafton, in his continuation of Hardyng, says of Richard III. and his queen: "The King and the queene descended, and before the high Altare, they were both houseled with one house, ienoyed between them."<sup>13</sup> No mention is made of the chalice. Walsingham in his account of Richard II. says: "Obrulit archiepiscopo panem et vinum, unde postea, tam metropolitanus, quam ipse rex, communicati fuerunt."<sup>14</sup> This would appear to favour the argument in proof of both kinds. The MS. account, so often quoted, of K. Henry VI. speaks of the communion of the Body of our blessed Lord, but not of the Blood: and then of

“ the wyne ” in a manner which can only mean that it was taken, unconsecrated, as an abluion. “ And than knelyng with humylite and gret deuocion, receyuing the thyrde parte of the holy sacrament vpon the patent of the archebisschoppes handes. Then come the bisschoppe of London with the grete solempne chales of seynt Edward, and serued hym with wyne.” In the same manner, the “ Devyse ” for Henry VIII. “ After the cardynall hath commoned his self, he hauing betweene his handes the same chalice wheruppon the holy sacrament shall be leyd, shall turne hymselfe vnto the king and the queene. And theye lying prostrate before hym shall sey their Confiteor, all the prelates answering, Misereatur. And the cardynall, saying, Absolue. That done, the king and the queene shall sumwhat aryse knelyng, and with grete humylitee and deuocion receyue the sacrament by the handes of the seid cardynall. This so done, the kinge and the queene shall stande vp, and take wine of the aboue reherced chalice, by the hands of the abbot of Westminster.”<sup>15</sup>

I may observe that the fatigue of the sovereign, as not unfrequently noticed in the old histories and records, is to be referred to the obligation under which he was, to receive the holy communion, fasting. And “ the Devyse ” has an especial reference to this ; succeeding the conclusion of the mass. “ And also it is to

<sup>15</sup> So, this direction previously in the same MS. “ The kyng shall offre an obbley of brede layed vpon the patent of Seint Edwardes chalice, with the whiche obleye after consecrate, the king shall be howseld. Also he shall offre in a cruet of golde, wyne, whiche he shall use in the chalice after he is howseld. And as well the seid patent with the obleye, as the cruce with wyne, shall be delyuered unto him by the Gospeller, at the tyme of his of-rynge.”

with that a certain place near the said shrine must be prepared with tapers and candles, by the orders of the king's chamber. Wherunto immediately the king shall goe, and there breake his faste. ¶ Item lyste." We learn also from Rymer, that Richard II. had already heard matins and mass, before he left his chamber: "surrexit rex. et auditis servitiis Dei, et missa, descendebat."<sup>16</sup> He had not of course communicated; though, according to the theology of the day, reception of the consecrated Eucharist would not have broken his fast.

There are but one or two subjects remaining, before I would close my remarks upon the Coronation Service.<sup>17</sup> And first; as to the place where it should be performed. This has been, since the reign of Edward the Confessor, fixed at Westminster, a rule which was

<sup>17</sup> In the ancient period immediately preceding the Conquest, the "Festa of the Church" was observed in the night days which the Anglo-Saxons were to observe. "Iste quoque primus coronavit nos, quia dicitur tenet octo." Scripto. Hist. H. I. regis. Wilhelmi. tom. 1. p. 312. "The law speaketh of this as the "Festa regis," but it is clear from the old law, that this was the same with its more usual title, "Festa Dei et sancti ecclesie." In the same and the succeeding century, the publication of this Law, to be strictly observed under pain of excommunication, at certain periods of the year, became frequent. See Knighton, de reat. Angliæ. Script. x. tom. 2. p. 2356. Hoveden, Ann. p. 343. Wilkins, tom. 1. p. 585. Lyndwood, lib. v. tit. xvij. Auctoritate Dei. verb. Pacem. The usual periods specified, were from Advent to the octave of the Epiphany; from Septuagesima to the octave of Easter; from Ascension-day to the octave of Pentecost; the Ember-weeks; from vespers on all Saturdays, until the Monday; on the greater Saints-days, and their Vigils; in parishes, on the feasts of their patron-saints; and upon all occasions of going to dedications of churches, to synods, or chapters.

only broken upon extraordinary occasions, or when the ceremony, as we have seen above, was repeated. But in more ancient times, other places received that distinction: Kingston-on-Thames, and Winchester; concerning which last-named city I would quote a passage from the Winchester annals, as it testifies to a very early coronation which I did not mention before, namely of K. Egbert. "Revertens inde Wintoniam, mandavit omnibus majoribus regnorum quæ conquieserat, ut convenirent ad illum die certo Wintoniam: veniunt Wintoniam clerus et populus, et assensu omnium partium coronatus est Egbertus in regem totius Britanniae."<sup>18</sup>

Next, as to the right of consecrating the new sovereign. This has always been claimed by the archbishops of Canterbury. In proof of this, and of the allowance of it, the evidence of an historian, who was probably born before the Conquest, has been appealed to by almost every writer on the subject. He is relating the coronation of William I. and that it was not, as according to ancient usage, performed by Stigand, archbishop of Canterbury. His words are: "In nativitate Domini unctus est in regem apud Westmonasterium a beatæ memoriæ Ealredo archiepiscopo Eboracensi, et nonnullis episcopis Angliæ. Quam consecrationem licet ipse rex et omnes alii optime nos-

tion has been credited by some writers, but rejected by others: whether true or false, it does not affect the fact of the coronation of K. Egbert at Winchester. A charter in the Textus Roffensis gives Egbert the title, "rex Anglorum." p. 97.

sent habere specialiter fieri et proprie a pontifice Cantuariensi, tamen quia multa mala et horrenda crimina perpetrabantur in Saxonibus qui eo tempore ibi pontifex erant noluit eam ad se suscipere, ne maledictionem videretur incurrere pro benedictione."<sup>29</sup> In the succeeding century, on occasion of the coronation of K. John, the right of the archbishop of Canterbury was no less recognized: which is clear from the fact that a protest was made on the part of the archbishop of York, that the solemnity should not be, unless he also was present. Which protest was disregarded. "Hubertus Cantuariensis archiepiscopus coronavit, et consecravit in regem Angliæ præfatum Johannem, — Philippo Dunelmensi episc. appellante, ne coronatio illa fieret in absentia Gaufridi Eboracensis archiepiscopi, totius Angliæ primatis."<sup>30</sup>

I must extract a document of the reign of Richard II. which does not plainly acknowledge the right of the archbishop. This is the royal mandate to the primate to attend at the coronation. "Richardus, Dei gratia, etc., venerabili in Christo patri Simoni, eadem gratia archiepiscopo Cantuar. totius Angliæ primati salutem.

<sup>29</sup> Hist. Nor. p. 6. I am not concerned with the true reason, why Stigand was not permitted to consecrate the king: the "horrenda crimina" of Eadmer, might probably without much difficulty, be made to shrink down into less serious political offences. Brompton, in his chronicle, declares that Stigand himself refused to perform the ceremony: and Malmsbury, who follows Eadmer in representing the interference of the archbishop of York to have been caused by the king, yet speaks of Stigand's disability as having been produced only by censures from the court of Rome: which had favoured the Conqueror's invasion. The reader may consult Collier. Ecc. Hist. vol. 1. p. 237. And, I am bound to add, for an unfavourable character of Stigand, Malmsbury, de gestis. p. 46.

Teste meipso, etc.”<sup>21</sup> This “breve regium” is interesting and important in several respects; but the reader will hesitate, I think, before he attributes much weight to the omission of which I have spoken. For there was no likelihood at that time that the archbishop would not be able to attend, and personally exercise his right; nor is it the kind of document in which, necessarily, this privilege would be specially noticed and acknowledged. Again, there is an earlier summons, A. D. 1308, Edward II., in a case where the archbishop was abroad, and the right is not only clearly enough acknowledged, but, if he could not return, he was required to nominate his deputy. “Et, si forte, aliquo casu contingente, vos, quod absit, contigerit impediri, ita quod die et loco prædictis, non poteritis vestram præsentiam exhibere, tunc vices vestras alicui de vestris suffraganeis committatis, qui officium, quod in coronatione nostra prædicta vobis incumbit, exequatur, et exerceat vice vestra.”<sup>22</sup>

I must not omit to mention, that archbishop Parker aims as another privilege of his see, the right to <sup>25</sup> Ibid. p. 509. Holinshed relates a case very much to the point, but he does not state his authority, and I do not see that it is noticed either by Matthew of Westminster, or Malmsbury, or Luningdon. But thus it is. Some write, that Elnothus, the archbishop of Canterbury, a man endued with all virtue and wisdom, refused to crown him: [Hald, A. D. 1036] for when the king required the said archbishop that he might be of him consecrated,—to whom only it did appertain to invest him with the crowne and scepter,—the archbishop flatlie refused, and with another protested, that he would not consecrate anie other for king, so long as the queen's children lived. The sceptre and crowne I here lay downe vpon the altar, and neither do I denie nor deliuer them unto you: but I forbid by the apostolike authoritie all the bishops, that none of them presume to take the same awaie, and deliuer them to you, or consecrate you for king." Chronicles. vol. 1. p. 182.

As soon as archbishop Parker's book was finished, there was published a little volume by the Puritans, with this title. "The life off the 70. Archbisshopp off Canterbury, presentlie settinge, englished, and to be added to the 69, lately sett forth in Latin. This numbere off seuentie is so compleat a number as it is great pitie ther should be one more: but that as Augustin was the first, so Matthew might be the last." Then follows the Life of Parker, as written by himself, translated. But to our present subject, I extract what the puritan author says of this privilege just spoken of in the text. "From this steppe he clymeth vpppe another, yet higher, that the kinges off this realme are crowned, and made by him, as that which off right is properlie due unto him." Sign. D. v. Thus merely repeating the archbishop's statement, without an attempt to disprove it. Some idea of this publication may be gathered from the title that it gives to the first archbishop, namely, "the hellish Augustine." It is a matter of congratulation that this, and many more of the same kind, written by the Elizabethan puritans, are among the most rare books of the time.

features of the case, as given by him. — Rex Henricus — consiliarius regis Anglie apud Wyndesore congregato. Adelinam filiam Godofredi duxit solemniter in uxorem: ubi Radulphus Cantuariensis archiepiscopus ad iracundiam et paralysim plurimum inclinatus

This privilege, if correct, would entitle the archbishop, I presume, to the oblations made by the sovereign at a coronation. I understand, however, that these oblations were not claimed by the archbishop at the late solemnities: perhaps, from not remembering the statement made by archbishop Parker; perhaps from a desire not to assert claims which might possibly be disputed, or to insist upon matters of secondary, although, in their kind, of considerable importance. The only memorial (or "fee" as it is called) allowed to the archbishop, was the chair he sat upon. For my own part, I regret, that the right to the oblations was not also remembered, and, at least, duly considered, if not ultimately pressed.

Lastly, I would observe upon the various Orders, which, either in the text or notes, the reader will find in this volume, that they will enable him to trace the Coronation Service of the Church and Realm of England, from the present time back to the eighth century: a period of eleven hundred years. No other church or country can produce a series so complete. Selden<sup>27</sup> regretted that although he had found many particulars in our old historians, he yet could not venture upon their warrant to construct the Ceremonial. He appears to have known of no ancient coronation ritual of the English Church, except the imperfect volume in the Cotton library, containing the order of K. Ethelred. This, though a fragment only, he printed: and he attempted to compensate for what he wanted by the Form appointed in the modern pontifical of the church of Rome, abounding, as the student may easily assure himself by a comparison, with very numerous and important variations from the old English Use; and by the coronation service of K. Charles V. of France, also having many differences. I trust, that the deficiencies of which that learned writer complained, are now fully supplied.

It would not be right to speak of the coronation service which I have edited in this volume, as "of the Use of Sarum;" although taken from the pontifical of that church: nor, in like manner, of the same service, as according to the Use of Winchester, or Exeter. Those churches, at the periods when the particular copies of their pontificals were written, now at one time now at another, adopted and included, according to its then state, this office, which formed one of the chief duties of the bishops of the church. The coronation-service was always "according to the Use of the Church of England": or, on account of its high privilege as the place where the solemnity was to be performed, "according to the Use of the Church of Westminster." So also, in modern times, the coronation service must be regarded as "according to the Use of the Church of England."<sup>28</sup>

The earliest state in which we find the Order, as it

<sup>28</sup> It is to be wished that the coronation-service was attached to our Common Prayer Book: and in the authorized Form, according to which it had last been used. People would then consider a coronation, more justly than many now do, not as a civil, but as a religious solemnity: and would regard their sovereign not only as a Person crowned, but as a Person sacred and anointed. At present it is so difficult to obtain a copy of the Service, that it is scarcely probable they can know much about the subject.

was in the pontifical of Egbert, archbishop of York, in the eighth century, is different indeed from that in which it was last left, upon the occasion of the coronation of her present Majesty. The alterations, whether of omission or addition, have been made very gradually : and it is probably true, that there has never yet been a coronation, without the service being subjected to some change, either for the better or the worse. The records of Ethelred, Henry I. Edward II. and Richard II. prove this, no less than those of James I. or George I. or Queen Victoria.

With respect to the authority, by which the Coronation Service from time to time has been revised and approved, I am able to state as to the late occasions, upon information derived from the highest source, that an order of council is directed to the archbishop of Canterbury, who, according to his own judgment, prepares a " Form and Order." On the one hand, doubtless, due attention must be paid to the expressed wishes of the sovereign on particular points ; upon the other, those wishes must be well considered, lest rites and ceremonies should be too hastily omitted, which, from a constant observance of them through a long series of generations, may claim the character of being essential to the right performance of a solemnity so high and sacred. I cannot in candour pretend to conceal my regret, that some changes, scarcely called for, were introduced upon the occasion of K. William IV. But that was a time when the outcry was extreme against any thing which bore the impress of antiquity ; and it is moreover probable that there were then reasons, why certain alterations should be made, which now might not be regarded as of much weight or value.

CHAPTER IV.

HAVING now seen the order of the Coronation Service, I shall now make some remarks upon another service which is frequently found in the Pontificals, namely, "De exequiis regalibus:" which is contained in the Vatican MS. c. 425, in the following form: "De exequiis migrare continetur, &c." This which consists solely of a single service, as the reader will find it in the Pontifical at the end of page 137. The paragraph "Cum deus corpus regis inuncti fuerit," which is "hominibus tractatur sepulturæ," is the same as the office "De exequiis regalibus," when it was placed separately in the pontificals. In the manuscript from which the episcopal services, edited in these volumes, are taken, this office is inserted upon a blank leaf at the end of the book, by a somewhat later hand. It forms a part of the Liber Regalis, pre- ceded by an illumination.

A curious and valuable order, in English, has been published in the Archæologia;<sup>1</sup> which I transcribe. "What shall be don on the demyse of a king annoynted.

"When that a king annoynted is decessed, aft' his body is sp'god, it must be washed and clesned by a bishop' for his holy annoyntem', than the body must be banded, wrapped in laun, or reynez yf it may be

“And when he may not godely longer endur, take hym away and bowell hym, and then eftones bame hym, wrappe him in raynez wele trameled in cords of silke, than in tarseryn tramelled, and than in velvet, and so in clothe of gold well tramelled, and than led hym and cofre hym, and in his leed w' hym a plate of his stile, name, and the date of our Lord gravyn, and yef ye cary hym, make an ymage like hym clothed in a surcote w' a mantell of estate, the laces goodly lying on his bely, his sept'r in his hande, and a crown on his hed, and so cary hym in a chare open w' lights and baners, accompanied with lords and estates as the counseil can best devyse, having the hors of that chare trapped with diu'se trappers or elles w' blake trappers of blake with scochons richely betyn, and his officers of armes aboute hym in his cotes of armez, his herneysz upon hym, his salet or basenet on his hed crowned, a shyld and a spere till he come to the place of his ent'ring.”

There appears to be but little difficulty in understanding this Order, whether in the Latin or English; except upon one point: as to the covering of the face: “oon his face a kerchief,” says the latter; and the former, “postmodum caput cum facie ipsius sudario serico cooperiatur.” But a chief object of the ancient lying in state, certainly was, that the sovereign might be known to be dead, by his subjects; and an English account of the deposition of K. Edward IV. attached to the same MS. from which I have just extracted, it says that the corpse was exposed, not only with the face but with the greatest part of the body naked, & that all the lordes both at the time and since saw hym so leying, and then

In this fact we have frequent reference in the old chronicles. Concerning Richard II., it is not surprising that many writers notice it; as it was pretended & known that he was still alive. Four contemporary authors speak of it: Otterbourne,<sup>2</sup> Walsingham,<sup>3</sup> Hardyng,<sup>4</sup> and Froissart. The last says, that the king lay at Chesham full two hours, his head on a black cushion and his face uncovered.<sup>5</sup> So with respect to Henry VI. we are told that after his death, "on the morrow he was chestyde [coffined] and brought to St. Paul's, and his face was open that every man might see him."<sup>6</sup> Again, Ras-

not believe that it was, after all, the body of the king. See, for example, the French metrical history of Richard's deposition, quoted above; where the author declares, p. 221, "I certainly do not believe that it was the old king; but I think it was Maudelain, his chaplain, who so exactly resembled him: &c." But this Maudelain was known to have been publicly executed before in London. Walsingham. p. 363.

tell leads us to conclude that such was the case even with the neglected corpse of Richard III.<sup>7</sup>

But the reasons for exposure which were of importance in these cases, could not have been considered with regard to Edward IV. already mentioned, and others, incidentally noticed presently: we must suppose, therefore, that the covering of the face directed in the rubric, was not to take place, until after sufficient time had previously elapsed for recognition by the people. We have no difficulty in proving that the other parts of the Order were generally observed, and I select a few examples.

found under the shoulder blades, with a gold chain: this was taken away by the person who discovered it, and given to K. James. A pamphlet was published, relating the circumstances; but there is very much in it that is suspicious, and I cannot help disbelieving the whole history. It is said by the author, "Chas. Taylor, Gent," (the plunderer himself), "it is highly remarkable, that the crucifix should have been found on that day whereon the late rebellion began in the West, and much about the same hour in the afternoon when they landed." This was Monmouth's enterprise. The pamphlet is a 4to. London. 1688.

portaretur ad sepeliendum, regio indutus apparatu, coronam in capite habens auream, et chirothecas in manibus, calceamenta auro texta in pedibus et calcearia, annulum magnum in digito, et in manu scerum, accinctusque gladio, discooperto vultu jacebat."<sup>13</sup>

Concerning the younger Henry, who died during his father's lifetime, Matthew Paris says: "Corpus autem in lineis vestibus, quas habuit in consecratione sacro chrismate delibutas, regaliter involutum."<sup>14</sup> Of K. John we learn, from the same historian, not only that his body, "regio schemate ornatum, ad Wigorniam delatum est;" but also that, "abbas canonicorum Crokestoniæ peritissimus in medicinis, facta anatomia de corpore regio, ut honestius portaretur, viscera copioso sale conspersa, in sua domo transportata, honorifice fecit sepeliri."<sup>15</sup>

<sup>15</sup> Ibid. p. 242. I cannot say that the reader of the old chronicles will be amused, for the subject is too solemn, but he will be interested with the various speculations which he will find in many of them, as to the condition, after death, of the soul of K. John. At least, they tell us a fearful tale of the miseries and calamities of his subjects, and the popular accusation of himself, as the immediate cause. Even concerning K. Stephen, of whose reign the Saxon chronicle has given us such a terrible description, I do not remember to have met with any similar remarks. Matthew Paris' own opinion is doubtful: "Sperandum est autem, et certissime confidendum, quod quedam bona opera, quæ fecit in hac vita, allegabunt pro eo ante tribunal Jesu Christi;" and he specifies the good deeds which he could recollect; "construxit enim abbatiam Cisterciensis ordinis de Bello loco; et moriturus domui de Crokestana decem librarum terram contulit

It was usual also to remove the brain; and there is a remarkable circumstance recorded, concerning Henry I. I take the account from Henry of Huntingdon. "Rex namque Henricus obierat: cujus corpus allatum est Rotomagum, et ibi viscera ejus et cerebrum et oculi consepulta sunt. Reliquum autem corpus—cavis taurinis reconditum est causa foetoris evitandi, qui multus et infinitus jam circumstantes inficiebat. Unde et ipse, qui magno pretio conductus securi caput ejus dissecerat, ut foetidissimum cerebrum extraheret, quamvis linteaminibus caput suum obvolquibutam." p. 242. He relates however more hyperbolically as it were the vision of a monk some ten years after: to whom the dead king appeared. "Quem monachus recensens, ac memoriter recensens, quod mortuus fuerat, visitabatur ab eo, qualiter se haberet. Cui rex: ita me habes, quod nemo pejus. Nam hæc mea quæ vides indumenta, adeo ardentia sunt et ponderosa ut nullus qui in sæculo vivit, illa tangere sufficeret præ ardore, vel propter ponderositatem portare, quin protinus moreretur. Sed tamen per Dei clementiam spero et gratiam ineffabilem—me quandoque misericordiam adepturum." Ibid. p. 280. The vision of another monk, recorded by Walter Hemingford, gives a contrary view of the matter. Chron. cap. cvij.

I have mentioned this subject, as being curious and important in many respects: and I would also take this opportunity of directing the reader's attention to the frequent descriptions which he will find in the middle-age historians, of visions of purgatory. Some of these are as horrible in their details, as the imagination can conceive. One thing is shewn; that the doctrine of purgatory in those days had not arrived at its full maturity of correctness, as afterwards expressed in its several details. Thus, we find in Matthew Paris, the soul of a certain clerk, enduring punishment: "et cum inquirerem, utrum misericordiam se aliquando consecuturum speraret, respondit: vae mihi, vae mihi, scio quod ante diem judicii omnino misericordiam non merebor: an autem vel tunc, incertum habeo." p. 157. But this ignorance could not be, according to the doctrine, as it is now settled, of the church of Rome.

visset, mortuus tamen ea causa pretio male gavisus est." <sup>16</sup>

I must not omit to quote a part of the will of K. Richard II. "Item volumus et ordinamus quod corpus nostrum in velveto vel sathano blanio, more regio, vestiatur, et etiam interretur, una cum corona et sceptro regis deauratis, absque tamen quibuscumque lapidibus: quodque super digitum nostrum, more regio, annulus cum lapide pretioso ponatur." <sup>17</sup>

The English order quoted above, directs an image of the dead king to be made: thus, for example, it was done for Henry V. "Superposita namque fuerat cistæ, in qua corpus ejus habebatur, quædam imago staturæ et faciei regis mortui simillima, clamys purpurea satis longa et larga cum furrura de ermyn induta, sceptrum in una manu, et pila rotunda aurea cum cruce infixæ in altera, corona aurea in capite, super capellum regni, et sandalis regiis in pedibus impositis." <sup>18</sup> Among the records in the Chapterhouse at Westminster, is an original minute of council for the ceremonial of the funeral of queen Catherine of Arragon: in which, among other matters, it is ordered that there should be provided, "a cast or puffed Ymage of a princesse apparailled in her robes of estate, w<sup>t</sup> a cronall uppon her hed in her heare, w<sup>t</sup> rings, gloves, and juells upon her handes." <sup>19</sup>

tomb afterwards, coloured to represent life, and habited in the proper costume and vestments of the day. Or, they were replaced by others, of a more lasting material, which, where they have been spared to us, still furnish some of the most valuable records of their kind to which it is possible for us to refer. Who is there, having once seen it, who does not remember the most noble and beautiful figure of queen Eleanor, upon her tomb in the confessor's chapel, in Westminster abbey?<sup>20</sup>

When it was necessary to bring the royal corpse from a distance, to the place of sepulture, it was customary at the various places, commonly abbies, where it rested, to meet it with solemn processions: and also, in the towns through which it passed. Thus, for instance, when Edward I. died. "Post principis prædicti decessum, venerabilis pater dominus Petrus cardinalis, et clerus Angliæ, cunctique regni nobiles, qui interesse poterant, obviam corpori undique occurrerunt, solemnes processiones, ad quas venerat, per ecclesias, faciendo."<sup>21</sup> And it is most probable, that it was not moved on, upon the succeeding day, until after mass had been said. We may conclude this, I think, from Walsingham's statement as to Richard II. "Cujus corpus per loca celeberrima—ubi contigit pernoctare, monstratum est post officium mortuorum, et in crastino post missam peractam."<sup>22</sup>

exequiis regalibus." without reminding the reader, that in various antiquarian publications, there are accounts printed of the opening and examination of royal tombs, which fully prove that the rubric was generally both carefully and accurately observed. One of the most interesting of these accounts, is that of the opening of the tomb of K. Edward I. in the year 1774. In which, passing by the state of the body itself, we find that it "was wrapped up within a large square mantle, of thick linen cloth, diapered, and waxed on its under side. The head and face were entirely covered with a sudarium, or face cloth, of crimson sarcenet,—formed into three folds. When the folds of the external wrapper were thrown back, and the sudarium removed, the corpse was discovered richly habited, adorned with ensigns of royalty.—Its innermost covering seemed to have been a very fine linen cerecloth, dressed close to every part of the body, and superinduced with such accuracy and exactness, that the fingers and thumbs of both the hands had each of them a separate and distinct envelope of that material.—Next above the cerecloth was a dalmatic, or tunic, of red silk damask; upon which lay a stole of thick white tissue, about three inches in breadth, crossed over the breast, and extending on each side downwards, nearly as low as the wrist, where both ends were brought to cross each other. [This stole is minutely described to be jewelled and embroidered.]—Over these habits is the royal mantle, or pall, of rich crimson satin, fastened on the left shoulder with a magnificent fibula of metal gilt with gold.—The corpse from the waist downwards, is covered with a large piece of rich figured cloth of gold, which lies loose over the lower part of the tunic, thighs, legs, and feet, and is tucked down behind the soles of the latter. There did not remain any appearance of gloves: but

CHAPTER V.

THE Services, in this volume, after the Order of Coronation, are those which relate to the ordination of priests, deacons, subdeacons, &c., and to the consecration of bishops. We have here a subject of enquiry before us, so vast, and branching out into so many collaterate questions, that I almost fear to enter upon it at all, in the necessarily confined limits within which I must keep myself. I shall propose therefore to do little more, than lay before the reader some collections from the English councils, and canonists, much in the same way as in the Dissertation in the first volume, bearing upon and illustrating the rubrics and ceremonies of the services themselves. Other matters, of no little interest, will be found discussed in the notes attached to those services.

I shall scarcely even approach the question, how far and in what sense we are justified in considering mains, seems to me to cast very considerable additional doubt upon the fact, and somewhat more than a suspicion of collusion. The inscription was "Hic requiescit sanctus Dunstanus archiepiscopus:" and it was argued that the tomb had never been disturbed. A correspondence followed between the archbishop and the monks of Glastonbury, who had claimed, for some centuries, possession of the body: and the reader will be repaid by a careful perusal of the whole matter. It is an unhappy exposure of ignorance and superstition on the part of the country-people, of something very like deceit in the monks, and partiality in the archbishop: who settled the dispute by declaring, if the convent of Glastonbury would not withdraw their claim, that he would excommunicate all persons who should presume to visit their pretended relics.

“Orders”<sup>24</sup> to be a sacrament : in some sense it is undeniable that it must be so regarded, as also are confirmation, and matrimony by the homilies of the church of England. We cannot receive the Ordinal of our Church, without acknowledging the truth of this, and echoing the words of S. Ambrose, “Homo imponit manum, Deus largitur gratiam : sacerdos imponit supplicem dexteram, Deus benedicit potenti dextera.”

<sup>25</sup> There is no lack of evidence that before the 16th century, the English church regarded orders in the same light; and I am not now concerned with the proof, if any such were needed, that she also ranked this rite too highly, and not according to the more just measure and rule of the Holy Scriptures, and the primitive ages. Thus, a synod of Durham, in the year 1220, in its canon, “de numero sacramentorum” first specifies five, and then continues : “Duo vero sequentia sunt ordo et conjugium, nec omnium licet quorundam, nec per eorum virtutem peccata dimittuntur, sed in eorum altero, scilicet in conjugio, peccatum fornicationis vitatur; in altero, scilicet ordine, quorundam virtutes au-

<sup>24</sup> “Ordo” when we meet with the term in the Fathers, may be understood in at least two ways, according to the context : either for the sacred rite itself of ordination, or for the ecclesiastical hierarchy, and various degrees of the ministers of the Church, which would seem to be its original and most strict interpretation. In this last sense, S. Augustine declares : “Ordo est parium dispariumque rerum sua cuique loca tribuens dispositio.” De civit. Del. Lib. xix. 13. 1. In the former we are to understand the Latin Ordinatio, or Sacra Ordinatio, and the Greek χειρονοια or χειροθεσια. The definitions of which by the canonists may be reduced to this : “Ritus sacer seu sacramentum, quo spiritualis potestas confertur sacramenta conficiendi et ministrandi, cæteraque ecclesiastica munia pro jure obeundi.”

gentur.” <sup>26</sup> Again, the famous synod of Exeter, in the year 1287; “Est et septimum sacramentum, sc. ordo; nam, sicut in veteri testamento sacrificia offerebantur, non per quoscunque, sed vocatos a Domino; ita nec in novo, nisi per ipsos, qui ad hoc sacros susceperint ordines, ecclesiastica sacramenta poterunt dispensari.” <sup>27</sup> So also Lyndwood in his gloss upon a constitution of archbishop Peckham: “Ordo. Istud est unum de duobus sequentibus [i: e: sacramentis] et sextum in numero, alias connumeratis præcedentibus: et nota quod Ordo, prout est sacramentum ecclesiæ ut hic, est signaculum quoddam, per quod spiritualis potestas traditur ordinato. Secundum Thomam istud sacramentum pertinet ad generationem spiritualem.” <sup>28</sup> And once more, the “Pupilla Oculi,” which commences with the enumeration of seven sacraments, of which the fifth is “Ordo,” and presently has several chapters “de sacramento Ordinis.” <sup>29</sup>

<sup>29</sup> The “Pupilla oculi,” once a very famous book, is now exceedingly rare, and but little known; nor do I believe that it has been printed since the reformation. As this is the first time that I have quoted it, the reader will not object, probably, to seeing its full title: from which he will be able to form some judgment as to its contents; and the value of them, as a record of the practice and opinions of the clergy of the English church, during the middle ages: “¶ Pupilla oculi, omnibus presbyteris præcipue Anglicanis summe necessaria: per sapientissimum divini cultus moderatorem, Johannem de Burgo, quondam almæ universitatis Cantabrigien. cancellarium: et sacræ paginæ professorem, necnon ecclesiæ de Colingam rectorem; compilata anno a natali Dominico, M.ccc.lxxxv. ~~CONFIRMATION OF THE SACRAMENTS~~

There is a general error in the decision of the Council of Trent, as to the nature of the sacraments. It has always been held in the East, and in the Western Church, that the sacraments are not only essential to the soul, but also to the body. The Council of Trent, however, declared that the sacraments are not essential to the body, but only to the soul. This is a great error, and one which has done much to the injury of the Church. By which decision, I think it may be said, it is really wonderful to perceive how carefully the Holy Ghost has been taken so as not to condemn the Greek Church upon the one hand, nor the Protestant in the other; and how the great controversies are chiefly and affected: for example, how many and what those "ordained ministers of minors" are: whether they are all of Divine Institution: whether all are of the nature of a sacrament, and equally so: whether all equally impress a character upon the person ordained; and others of the like kind.

I may add that a "Pupilla" is referred to, earlier than this of De Burgo, in a sentence of excommunication settled by a provincial council at York, A.D. 1311. See Wilkins, Conc. Tom. 2. p. 414. Another book of the same kind was the "Manipulus curatorum;" in which, as the first sentence declares, "pernecessaria officia eorum quibus animarum cura commissa est breviter pertractantur." This was frequently printed by both Winkyn de Worde and Pynson. It treats of the sacraments, the articles of the faith, and the ten commandments. I shall have occasion to refer to it, as we proceed.

They, who denied that there were seven orders only, encreased the number sometimes to eight, by adding the Episcopate; sometimes to nine, by adding the Tonsure; and others would even make a tenth, by distinguishing the archbishops of the church.<sup>32</sup> The chief difficulty rested with the episcopate: whether bishops were to be considered as distinct from priests, not merely in the degree of their office, but in its nature.

There are so many duties common to both bishops and priests, that we may regard the two degrees as but one Order: "both are ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God; both are invested with the cure of souls: both are sent to teach and preach the Gospel of Christ: to baptize: to celebrate the eucharist: to bless the congregation:"<sup>33</sup> but there still remains the very high power, attached to the one only, of sealing with the Holy Spirit in confirmation, and of conferring orders. The balance of authority, even from the earliest ages, certainly inclines to consider

as illustrating the term clericus. "Omnes qui in ecclesiastici ministerii gradibus ordinati sunt, generaliter clerici nominantur." De eccles. off. lib. 2. cap. 1.

<sup>33</sup> Palmer, Treatise of the Church. vol. 1. p. 374. I cannot agree with Mr. Palmer however in including confirmation within the offices common to both: because, although as Habertus says, Pontif. Græc. p. 709, the Greek church permits her priests to confirm, yet it is only by special commission, and with chrism previously hallowed.

Preliminary Description.

The two orders are not to be identical with the functions of the bishop and the mass-priest; and I think that the two orders are not so much to the fact that they are common to both, as that one of them has power in its name, that of consecrating the holy eucharist. Much however, as I would desire to pursue this question further, I must nevertheless proceed to matters more immediately within my subject.

The opinion in the Anglo-saxon age generally, seems to have been that the number of orders was limited to seven. Late in the seventh century we find a constitution beginning: "Septem sunt dona spiritus sancti et septem gradus sunt ecclesiasticorum ordinum et sacramentorum functionum."<sup>34</sup> Again, in the canons of Ælfric: "Seven degrees are established in the church—the sixth diaconus, the seventh presbyter."<sup>35</sup> Once more, in the pastoral epistle of the same Ælfric: "Beloved, seven orders are appointed in books [on bocum] for God's ministries in Christ's church."<sup>36</sup> Against these, we have the following in the Ecclesiastical Institutes, about the same period, in the chapter
"De munere et dignitate sacerdotum." "Ye ought also to know, that your orders are the second orders after our orders, and the next to us; like as the bishops are in the stead of the apostles in the church of the holy, so are the mass-priests in the stead of Christ's

same, in plain words: "Beloved, understand that both are of one order, the bishop and the mass-priest, that is, of the seventh church order, as holy books tell

For later opinions; I shall content myself with quoting, first, the Pupilla Oculi. "Septem sunt ordines sive gradus: et sic loquendo de ordine, ut est sacramentum, et characterem imprimit;—prima tonsura non est ordo sed dispositio quædam ad ordinem.—Episcopatus autem non est ordo proprie, sed dignitas, sive excellentia in ordine, tum quia non imprimit characterem, tum etiam quia omnis ordo ordinatur ad sacramentum eucharistiæ."<sup>38</sup> And secondly, Lyndwood: "Ut volunt theologi quasi omnes, solum sunt septem ordines. Unde secundum eos, tonsura, quæ vocatur psalmistatus, non est ordo sed solum dispositio ad ordines: sic etiam episcopatus, secundum eos, non est ordo in quantum sacramentum, sed dignitas. Ordo namque sumitur

<sup>38</sup> Pars. vij. cap. 1. C. The author of the "Manipulus curatorum," is decided against reckoning the tonsure as an order, but he continues; "De episcopatu vero utrum sit spiritualis ordo dubito." Lib. 5. Cap. ij. And Guillelmus Parisiensis, de vij. sacramentis, draws a distinction similar to that laid down in the Pupilla, saying also, that the episcopate presupposes the priesthood, and depends upon it. fol. xij. b. But he does not clearly decide the point, that is, in his opinion. I quote this book, as it was also in much estimation among the English clergy of the 15th century. Compare also, the "Parochiale curatorum," Tit. 9. cap. vj. edit. 1514.

T later opinions of the Roman theologians seem to incline to consider the episcopate as a distinct order: see Perrone, Prælect. Theol. vol. viij. p. 126. Dens Theologia. tom. 7. p. 39. But Thomas Aquinas plainly said, "episcopatus non est ordo." In 4. sect. dist. 24. q. 2. art. 2. And Bonaventure, "Episcopatus, prout distinguitur contra sacerdotium, non est proprie nomen ordinis, nec novus character imprimitur, nec nova potestas datur, sed potestas data ampliatur." Opera. tom. 5. p. 369. Bellarmine takes a middle line between the two extremes. He reckons seven orders, and dividing the priesthood, declares that ordination to the episcopate is a sacrament, confers grace, and impresses a character. Opera. tom. 3. p. 609. Compare Bonacina, tom. 1. Disp. viij. p. 219.

non dicitur. Non aliquando est nomen dignitatis, et sic episcopatus dicitur ordo: aliquando est nomen ofnomen spiritualis processus, et sic diaconatus dicitur

As an office, there is no evidence that the "Modus faciendi tonsuræ" can be traced higher than the seventh century. Hence we do not find any prayers or forms in the oldest MSS. and sacramentaries, "de clerico faciendæ." Not that it can be disputed, that the practice of distinguishing the clergy by their hair, is of very high antiquity: first probably introduced to a moderate and seemly extent, for the sake of outward decency and gravity, according to the admonition of the Apostles; afterwards restricted within the limits of a certain fashion, and shape. And it is not difficult to trace the progress of these restrictions, in the canons of successive councils, as time went on.<sup>40</sup> The reason why, about the time that I have mentioned above, the conferring of the tonsure came to be a separate and distinct office, probably was, because parents were then accustomed to dedicate their children to the

 was not simply through humility, but probably as claiming their highest privilege, that we find bishops anciently styling themselves priests, and ministers. Thus sacred ministry, and to leave them in monasteries, at an age too young to permit of their performing even the lowest functions of ostiarius or lector: when, nevertheless, it was desirable that a mark should be set upon them, that they were no longer merely secular.<sup>41</sup>

As to the shape, and fashion of the tonsure, many writers have not hesitated to trace it up to the authority of S. Peter himself. For instance, Rabanus Maurus. "Sunt quidam doctorum, qui asserunt, diversas ob causas Petrum apostolum hunc ritum primum sumpsisse primitus."<sup>42</sup> But long before his time, Bede records an epistle of the abbot Ceolfrid, about the year 710, to whom an application had been made, for an opinion, concerning the variety of tonsures: who says; "inter omnes tamen, quas reperimus tonsuras, nullam magis sequendam nobis amplectendamque jure dixerim ea, quam in capite suo gestabat ille, cui se confitenti Dominus ait, 'Tu es Petrus.'—Neque vero ob id tantum in coronam attondemur, quia Petrus ita attonsus est; etc."<sup>43</sup> And such would seem to be still

The excerpts however of his contemporary Egbert, although they recognize the tonsure of S. Peter, follow another common view taken by the early canonists: "Exordium tonsuræ a Nazaræis incepit, qui crine servato post vitæ magnæ continentiam caput radebant, ut devotionem Domino consecrarent." Wilkins. Conc. tom. 1. p. 111. I am not speaking of the varieties of the tonsure in that age, but of its supposed original. The disputes which took place in the eighth century as to the proper shape of the ton-

I would remark here that not only bishops, but priests, by special permission, or privilege, as in the case of abbots, were permitted to confer the tonsure: and even the minor orders. Thus, the Pupilla laid down: "Episcopus et nullus inferior eo, potest ordines conferre auctoritate propria et ordinaria potestate. Alii vero non episcopi, ut abbates, ex privilegio vel speciali permissione possunt minores ordines conferre. Sacros autem solus episcopus."<sup>47</sup>

At a very late period we find the tonsure ordered to be given to those scholars, who were to be educated at the expense of the cathedral establishments throughout the realm. The legatine constitutions of cardinal Pole divide these scholars into two classes, according to their age: and further direct: "Incedent autem omnes, utriusque sint classis, cum tonsura et vestitu clericali, eodemque vivendi modo utentur, et divinis in ecclesia officiis inservient."<sup>48</sup> And that this was not a new custom, we may conclude from what Knyghton says of the early years of archbishop Edmund, in the reign of Henry II. its, as little different from laymen as they could be ;

Sic inter laicos clericus defloruit.”<sup>53</sup> Lastly, one of the visitation articles for the diocese of London, in Q. Mary’s reign, enquires: “Item, whether they and every each of them doth go in priestly apparel and habit, having their beards and crowns shaven? or whether any of them doth go in laymen’s habits and apparel, or otherwise disguise themselves, that they cannot easily be discovered or known from laymen?”<sup>54</sup>

There was a difference, it is quite clear from the English councils, between the “tonsura” and the “corona”: although the two are frequently confounded, and sometimes both meant by the use of either term alone. When both are named, one must doubtless be understood to relate to the length of the hair, the other to the bare circle on the top of the head: the shaven crown. I shall cite some canons directed to this point. Of York, in 1195. “Statuimus etiam, ut clerici, qui ab episcopo coronam susceperunt, tonsuram habeant, et coronam.” Of the provincial council at Oxford, in 1222: “ut nec ipsi, nec alii clerici comam nutriant, sed honeste tonsi et coronati convenienter incedant.” Of a synod at Lambeth, in 1261: “Item statuimus, quod omnes — qui privilegio clericali gaudere voluerint, tonsuram decentem, et coronam rasi capitis deferant competentem.”<sup>55</sup> The following sup-

the tonsure: and early in the eighth century, we find this specified, among the excerpts of Egbert, (citing Fructuosus,) in the case of a criminous monk: “coronam capitis, quam gestat, amittat.” Ibid. tom. 1. p. 105.

port the distinction which I have suggested: a constitution of bishop Cantilupe, in 1240: "De clericorum tonsuris. — nec crines, nec comam nutriant, sed decenter et circulariter tondeantur, coronam habentes decentis amplitudinis, secundum quod exegerit ordo, quo fuerint insigniti." And a pastoral epistle of archbishop Morton: "Incedent etiam omnes et singuli presbyteri, et clerici ejusdem nostræ provinciæ, coronas et tonsuras gerentes, aures patentes ostendendo."<sup>56</sup> Lyndwood has a gloss upon the provincial constitution cited above. "Tonsi; hæc tonsura sic fiet, ut aures sint patentes. Et hoc, si religiosus sit, altius: si sæcularis, dimissius. Et sic, quod inter presbyterum et alios inferiores sit differentia. Coronati; rasura superior, et tonsura inferior, faciunt de circulo capillorum coronam."<sup>57</sup>

Before I proceed to other matters connected with this great subject of ordinations, I must again remind

If the student desires to investigate accurately the subject of the Tonsure, its history, various fashions, the mystical reasons proposed for it, the laws and canons of the Roman church directed towards its proper observance, and other details, he should consult Thomassin, Ecc. discipl. Pars. 1. lib. 2. the reader, that I shall be anxious to furnish him with a selection of extracts from the councils and authoritative books of the English Church only, in number and in variety sufficient to enable him, not merely to understand the offices which I have edited, but also the doctrines which were to be held, and the practices which were to be observed regarding the clergy in general, from the Anglo-saxon age, down to the sixteenth century. I shall but very rarely refer to authors who have treated the subject at large, such as Thomassin, or Saussajus, or Martene, or Morinus, or Catalani, and many others; not to mention the canonists, Van Espen for example, or those who have directed their enquiries more particularly towards the Eastern Church, as Goar and Habertus: but I seek rather to supply the deficiencies which they have left, respecting the decisions and observances of that branch of the Church of Christ, with which we are the more intimately concerned, namely, of the Church of England.

First, as to the preliminary examinations which were to be had, before admittance into any of the Orders, whether the greater or the minor. In the middle of the eighth century, the 6th canon of the council of Cloveshoo is addressed to this point: "De examinatione eorum qui ordinandi sunt. Sexto statutur decreto; ut episcopi nullum de clericis seu monachis ad sacrum presbyteri gradum ordinent, nisi prius ejus vitam, qualis extiterit, vel tunc quæ morum probitas, ac scientia fidei existat, manifeste perquirant." In the same century, later, about the year 785; at the council of Chalcuith: "Sextum decretum: ut nullus episcoporum presbyterum aut diaconum ordinare præsumat, nisi probatæ vitæ fuerint, et officium suum recte implere possint." I pass over the intermediate time, until the provincial council at Oxford, in 1222: which, in its canon "de ordinibus et ordinandis," prohibits, upon the authority of the ancient ecclesiastical statutes, "ut nullus ad ordines accedat aut admittatur, nisi qui fuerit canonice examinatus." Shortly after, the famous legatine constitutions of Otho were published: of which the sixth is: "De scrutinio ordinandorum. Sacer ordo eo est digno dignius conferendus, quo ab ordinato sacramenta cætera conferuntur. Quare cum periculosum sit, minus dignos ordinari, statuimus, ut ante collationem ordinum per episcopum indagatio diligens habeatur."<sup>58</sup>

And we find the same care taken up to the period of the reformation. The statutes of a provincial council in 1529 direct: "Statuimus et ordinamus, quod nullus clericus sæcularis de cætero admittatur ad sacros ordines, nisi habuerit literas testimoniales curati

<sup>58</sup> Wilkins Conc. tom. 1. p. 95. 147. 595. 651. Johnson, having translated this last constitution in his Ecclesiastical Laws, adds a very senseless remark below it: I notice it, because the same mode of reasoning is occasionally employed, when other means fail, by persons who have neither the learning nor the usual discretion of that writer. He says: "here we may see the great carelessness which then prevailed in ordaining clergymen." It just shews the very contrary. And if his inference is correct, we ought to conclude in a similar way from the canons of the Church of England now, and the often repeated admonitions of her bishops, that no care is taken in ordaining fit persons to the sacred ministry; or from the charge given by S. Paul to Timothy, that even in that early age, men commonly were no less hastily ordained.

This constitution of Othobon is further remarkable, for the following provision: "ne reprobatis, qui fuerint reprobandi, approbatis, se clanculo immiscere valeant reprobati, in examinatione scribatur numerus, et nomina probatorum; et qui scripti fuerint postmodum in ordinationis limine, perlecta scriptura discretionem solita requirantur; ipsaque scriptura apud episcopum vel ecclesiam cathedrali conservetur." et œconomorum vel parochiæ, in qua natus, beneficiatus, vel per triennium proxime præcedens commoratus fuerit, sub sigillo archidiaconatus jurisdictionem habentis; seu, si in aliqua universitate studens fuerit, sub sigillo commissarii universitatis Oxon. seu vicecancellarii Cantabrig. cum testimonio superioris loci sui. — Exacte etiam curent episcopi, ut neminem de cætero ad subdiaconatus ordinem promoveant, nisi eum qui adeo sit exercitatus in evangeliiis et epistolis sacris, saltem in missali contentis, ut eorundem sensum grammaticalem examinatori prompte et expedite reddere valeat: sitque eorum quilibet sufficienter instructus etiam in aliis ad ordinem illum, quem tunc assumpturus est, per sacros canones requisitis, et in officiis divinis secundum morem ecclesiæ et loci consuetudinem promptus et expertus; habeatque præterea in presbyterum ordinandus cætera ad ipsius officium et ordinem ipsi sacerdotibus necessario requisita.”<sup>59</sup>

The provincial canon cited above, of the year 1222, was repeated in almost the same words, under archbishop Walter Reynold, one hundred years after: and upon this examination I extract Lyndwood’s gloss. “De hac examinatione quando, per quos, et de quibus fieri debet, habes 24 di. c. quando: debet enim examinador inquirere de vita, genere, patria, ætate, institutione sive titulo ordinandi. Item de loco ubi conversatus est, de conscientia, fide et hujusmodi. Item de his quæ concernunt regulam Apostolicam, etc.”<sup>60</sup> “Hic

Et tunc in die ordinum celebrandorum archidiaconus, vel examinatus alius ad hoc deputatus, in actu celebrationis ordinum presentabit episcopo ordinanti ipsos ordinandos.”<sup>61</sup> Upon the legatine constitution of Otho, his commentator J. de Athon, has a very ample gloss, of great importance, to which I am forced to refer the student :<sup>62</sup> citing only this, upon the word “periculosum.” “Sc. ordinanti, cum ordinat indoctum loco docti : magistrumque facit qui vix discipulus esse po-vero in ordinandis potissime requiruntur : sc. literatura sufficiens, ætas legitima, morum honestas.” Pars, vij. cap. 3. G.

<sup>61</sup> Ibid. verb. Presentatores. See Hostiensis in summa. cap. De scrutinio in ordine faciendo. This canonist was of high authority in the Church of England, as appears from the frequent reference to him not only by Lyndwood, but also by the rubrics of the old service-books of the church. See, for example, in the Ordo Sponsalium, fol. 1. p. 59. and note 32. p. 60. The Pupilla, I must add, speaks of a double examination, in a passage, of which the last part is worth the reader’s attention : “Duplex scrutinium fieri debet ante ordinis collationem : primum debet fieri per archidiaconum. Vel per alios sacerdotes et viros prudentes, quos a latere suo mittet episcopus ad locum ubi celebrandi sunt ordines. — Aliud

Not only were strict examinations insisted on, previously to the conferring of orders, but there were certain disabilities which either barred altogether the reception of them,<sup>63</sup> or, at least, required a dispensation.

<sup>63</sup> There are numerous canons, and decisions of canonists, against the conferring of any orders upon women. Very anciently there were undoubtedly heretics, such as the Collyridians, who practised such ordinations, but the Catholic Church instantly and unhesitatingly condemned them. Compare also the Constit. Apost. lib. 3. c. ix. Some have argued that nevertheless, in the first centuries, women were ordained, and appeal to the "presbyteræ," and "episcopæ," whom we meet with in many records. But these were the wives of priests and bishops, either before or after their ordination: in the former sense, according to the 19th canon of the council of Turin: cited by Bingham: (vol. 1. p. 336.) "Si inventus fuerit presbyter cum sua presbytera, aut diaconus cum sua diaconissa, aut subdiaconus cum sua subdiaconissa, annum integrum excommunicatus habeatur." Labbe. Concil. Tom. 5. p. 856.

Nor can the deaconesses of the primitive ages be taken as any precedent for such a custom: for independently of their functions being strictly kept separate from any matter appertaining to the priesthood, or to the public service of the Church, and being limited to the performance of mere secular duties, such as visiting the sick, and catechizing women, &c. it is very doubtful whether they received imposition of hands. I cannot enter into this question, but would refer the reader to Baronius, sub an. xxxiv. and to the 19th canon of the council of Nice, with the notes of Balsamon and Zonaras, in Bevereg. Pandect. Tom. 1. p. 82. And even if after all, there may seem to be a balance of evidence in favour of some imposition of hands, yet this was in the way of a benediction, and not of ordination. See Justellus, Bibl. Jur. Canon. tom. 1. p. 75. Casalius, de sacr. Christ. ritibus: pars. 2. cap. xxix. Bingham,

Among them were the following. Illegitimacy: as specified by the Winchester canons, in 1308: "De matrimonio:—ejus quanta sit virtus in Dei ecclesia, per hoc facile cernitur, quod sola proles, quæ in fide thori gignitur, ad dignitates ecclesiasticas admittitur; et aliter genita, sine dispensatione canonica, ab hujusmodi, reprobatur."<sup>64</sup> And by a provincial canon of archbishop Edmund, in the preceding century: upon which I quote Lyndwood. "Tales, [i: e: qui de non legitimo matrimonio nati sunt,] ordinari non debent. Dicitur enim communiter per doctores, quod illegitime nati non possunt ordinari ad sacros ordines sine dispensatione Papæ, nisi ingrediantur religionem, quo casu possunt ad omnes sacros ordines promoveri etiam sine dispensatione. Possunt tamen illegitime nati Antiq. Book. 2. Chap. xxij. I quote also this from the Manipulus Curatorum: "Et si forte in aliquo capitulo mulier inveniatur vocari diaconissa vel presbytera, intelligendum est quod illa vocatur diaconissa, supra quam fundabatur aliqua benedictio: presbytera autem vocatur, quia secundum morem primitivæ ecclesiæ erat uxor presbyteri: vel forte aliqua vidua de rebus ecclesiæ curam habens ad instar matrifamilias vocabatur presbytera. Et ita exponenda sunt omnia capitula quæ loquuntur de ista materia." Lib. 5. cap. v. Compare also (Guillermus Parisiensis: de vij sacramentis. fol. xiiij.

It is not necessary to dwell upon the analogy sometimes insisted on, from the circumstance that civil power and jurisdiction are exercised by women: for the nature of the ecclesiastical ministry, instituted by our Blessed Lord, is in fact so different, that the two cases are not analogous. Sometimes the example of abbesses is appealed to, but the decision upon this point of the canonists is unanimous: "illarum potestatem non esse veræ jurisdictionis, quæ videlicet ex auctoritate clavium descendat ecclesiæ concessa, sed earum munus ad vigilantiam referri, ad curam quandam domesticam, maternam et œconomicam."

Upon the whole question compare the decision of Lyndwood. Lib. 1. Tit. 7. Sacerdotes. verb. Masculi.

The children of serfs or villeins : of which we have frequent examples in the earlier centuries. The 16th of the famous articles of Clarendon decides, “Fili rusticorum non debent ordinari absque assensu domini, de cujus terra nati esse dignoscuntur.” In the next century, 1256 ; a canon of the diocese of Chichester: “Ut nullus se nobis offerat ordinandus, nisi liberæ conditionis existens ; de legitimo matrimonio natus, et examinatione canonica examinatus, et approbatus.”<sup>66</sup> From an allusion in a canon of the Exeter synod of 1287, we learn, that in spite of all precautions, such persons, by pretending that they were free, and suborning witnesses, obtained ordination ; to which falsehood the penalty of excommunication was attached : and some years before this time, it was ordered by another council, that such persons should be suspended : “Præcipimus itaque, quod sacerdotes, qui se noverint filios servorum, et præter conscientiam dominorum suorum ordinatos—non exequantur sacerdotis officium, donec nostrum super hoc ab eis fuerit consilium requisitum.”<sup>67</sup> I shall only add further upon this head, the 82nd of the apostolical canons, upon which probably, or at least upon similar reasons, the apparently harsh regulation was originally founded. “ Servos in clerum provehi sine venia dominorum non permittimus ad possessorum molestiam. Domorum enim eversionem illud efficit.”<sup>68</sup>

But, that we may not delay to particularize all these disqualifications separately, I shall cite two authorities in which they are joined and named together. One of these, of a very early date: from the dialogue of archbishop Egbert: the xvth interrogation. “ Pro quibus criminibus nullus sacerdos potest fieri, vel pro quibus jam pridem ordinatus deponitur? Responsio. Hujusmodi tunc ordinatio episcopi, presbyteri, vel diaconi, rata esse dicitur: si nullo gravi facinore probatur infectus, si secundam non habuit [uxorem] nec a marito relictam; si pœnitentiam publicam non gessit, nec ulla corporis parte vitiatus apparet; si servilis aut ex origine non est conditionis obnoxius; si curiæ probatur nexibus absolutus; si adsecutus est literas; hunc elegimus ad sacerdotium promoveri. Pro his vero criminibus nullum licet ordinari, sed promotos quosque dicimus deponendos; idola scilicet adorantes; per aruspices incantatores captivos se diabolo tradentes;

same purpose: “ Fideles decet ea fugere, quæ scandala generent aliquibus. Alienum vero servum contra domini sententiam clericum fieri, causa est scandali, atque molestiæ.—Quod si servus gradu sacro dignus existimetur, episcopum de eo negotio cum domino communicare oportet.” Bevereg. Pandect. Tom. 1. p. 54. The canon itself, I should observe, refers to the case of Onesimus; “ noster quoque Onesimus.”

fidem suam falso testimonio expugnantes; homicidiis vel fornicationibus contaminatos; furta perpetrantes; sacrum veritatis nomen perjurii temeritate violantes.”<sup>69</sup>

The other, a canon of the provincial council under Stephen Langton: “Minores clerici ad inferiores gradus non admittantur, nisi idoneos habeant procuratores, et per testimonium eorundem admittantur. Nullus simoniacus, homicida, excommunicatus, aut suspensus, furarius, sacrilegus, incendiarius, aut falsarius, aut aliter hujusmodi canonicum impedimentum ad quoscunque ordines præsumat accedere.”<sup>70</sup>

I believe that it may be asserted, that at no time after Christianity became fixed, and spreading, among the Anglo-saxons, was the necessity overlooked of a title,<sup>71</sup> that is, of a nomination to some post of duty, previously to the actual reception of Holy Orders. The council of Calcuith, in the eighth century, decreed, that all priests and deacons “in illo titulo perseverent, ad quem consecrati sunt.” And before this, the excerpts of Egbert, (citing a Chalcedonian canon) say; “Ut nullus absolute ordinetur, et sine pronunciatione loci, ad quem ordinandus est.” The term absolute is explained by its use in the following canon from the council of London, 1126. "Nullus in presbyterum nullus in diaconum, nisi ad certum titulum ordinetur qui vero absolute fuerit ordinatus, sumpta careat dignitate." This is not to be so interpreted as to mean that his orders, so received, were invalid; but that he was not to enjoy the dignities and privileges attached to his degree. Again, the sixth of the council of London, in 1200; "Firmiter observari præcipimus, ut si episcopus aliquem sine titulo certo in diaconum, vel presbyterum ordinauerit, tamdiu ei subministret, donec ei in aliqua ecclesia convenientia stipendia militia clericali assignet, nisi forte talis, qui ordinatur, extiterit, qui de sua vel paterna hæreditate subsidia vitæ possit habere. Item in subdiaconi ordinatione statutum; adjunctes, ut si archidiaconus citra speciale mandatum episcopi sui aliquem prædictorum ordinationi præsentaverit, et is ad ejus præsentationem ordinatus fuerit, prædictæ pænæ subjaceat." Once more the synod of Exeter, in 1287: "Caveant ad sacros ordines promovendi, ut titulum habeant sufficientem sine quo omnibus ad sacros ordines accedere interdici mus facultatem."<sup>72</sup>

The possession of a title, by every candidate for orders, as insisted on so universally, sprung not only (as before said) from the desire that he should have some immediate field or scope for his labours, but also to check the encroachment, which was becoming excessive about the seventh and following centuries, of unemployed clergy. Unemployed, because they either would not seek for, or could not obtain, cures or bene-fices. There were so many privileges, and exemptions from civil jurisdiction, which at that time began to be attached to the spirituality, that men were eager to receive orders, merely that they might enjoy its privileges.

A title, also, conveyed with it the customary stipend, sufficient to provide the usual and proper necessities of life. Otherwise, the Church would have been overrun not only with idle, but with indigent clergy. This is a point already touched upon in one of the canons just quoted: and so also the Pupilla oculi: “Inquirant etiam examinatores de titulo ordinandi, et si habeat patrimonium proprium unde poterit sustentari competenter:—quia si ordinetur sine titulo tenetur episcopus seu præsentator ei necessaria providere.”<sup>2</sup> And John de Athon justly says, that any arrangement with a bishop, or patron, not to press or insist upon this claim, would be of the nature of simony: “Ordo namque sacer sine titulo, i: e: beneficio dare non debet. etc.—Nec tamen potest ordinandus reprobere ordinanti, vel præsentanti, de non inquietando eos in forma, absque specie simoniæ ex utraque parte.” The title also, must not be a feigned one. “Et vero. i: e: non ficto, alias ordinans talem, se obligat. Sed nunquid sufficiat ad excusationem ordinantis quod ordinandus hujusmodi suo titulo oblato asserat se contentum? quia volenti non fit injuria. etc. Tu dic contra, cum ibi hoc præcavendum sit indecentiæ clericali.

Item hujusmodi remissio expressa simoniam inducere ergo tacite non censetur subintelligi. Et intelligi quod de hujusmodi titulo certo ordinandus debet facere fidem per aliqua sufficientia documenta, sc. per teste etc.”<sup>74</sup>

Upon the much disputed question of the propriety of conferring orders, whether two or more, at one time, I must content myself with extracting one constitution only, a long one, of archbishop Peckham, at Lambeth, A. D. 1281. “Cum secundum doctores catholicos militia clericalis septem muniatur ordinibus singulorum characteribus in anima consignatis, per singulos etiam augmentum recipiens gratiæ, nisi ordinati fidei ordinem suscipiant crimine irretiti, expedit plurimum ipsos ordines minime recipere inculcatos quoniam inculcatio reverentiam minuit, et gratiam per consequens, quæ per irreverentiam repercutitur alii ingratia. Contra dignitatem igitur tam reverentissimum omnino dignoscitur sacramenti, quinque simul ordines scilicet ordines non sacros cum uno sacro, alicui uni homini exhibere; unde in nonnullis aliis provinciis quatuor minores ordines non simul faciliter conferuntur, ut ascendentes clerici ad Christi ministeria quas graduum canticum continentia, cum probati extiterint in minoribus officiis, gradatim demum procedant ad majora. Quia igitur ex singulis ecclesiis, quæ pia quæque religiosa, quæque honesta sunt, tenemur eligere et ea tanquam fasciculum in Anglorum mentibus colligare; præcipimus, ut episcopi in his sequantur canonicas sanctiones; minores etiam ordines, quando id potest fieri, bono modo, pro sacramenti reverentia seu necessitate dentur saltem aliquoties combinati, et recipientes eos, seu simul, seu sigillatim, in vulgari lingua publice instruantur de distinctione ordinum, officiorum et characterum, ac de profectu gratiæ, quæ in singulis ordinibus continetur, et digne accedentibus augmentatur.”<sup>75</sup>

I have placed in the note below, some important observations of Lyndwood, bearing upon the same point. And to the like purpose is the following from the Pupilla. “Potest quis omnes minores ordines recipere eodem die nisi consuetudo esset repugnans, cujus contrarium forte scandalum generaret. Sed unus ordo sacer cum minoribus vel duo sacri nullo

Sed nunquid cum uno de minoribus ordinibus possit eidem personæ eodem die conferri ordo subdiaconatus? Hostiensis dicit plane quod non: et videtur hoc satis decisum in capit. Cum H. ubi delictum talis patet ex tribus. Primo, quia recipienti ordinem subdiaconatus cum minore ordine eodem die imputatur temeritas. Secundo, quia ejus excessus magnus et multus esse judicatur. modo uni eodem die conferantur. Et qui contra hanc formam furtive ordines receperit debet deponi.”<sup>76</sup>

From these, and other testimonies, if it was necessary to appeal to them, not omitting that of the office below, p. 157, it is quite clear, that long before the reformation, the minor orders, whatever the theory may have been, had, in fact and practice, fallen into disuse, in the church of England, as now they also have in the church of Rome. The names were retained, and the clergy required to pass through them,<sup>77</sup> before the reception of the diaconate or priesthood: but as the names and titles were all which had survived the long lapse of time, it was a wise course to remove so unserviceable a remnant from the revised ordinal of our church. These minor orders, and I now include the subdiaconate, were not of divine institution; <sup>78</sup> claiming, (and truly, it is not to be de-

Isti perfecti ordines secundum institutionem ecclesiæ recipi debeant secundum quandam ordinem incipiendo.” And it is decided that if this rule had not been followed, the person so transgressing would require a dispensation. It would appear also, that if a priest had not received the diaconate (for example), he was to receive ordination to it, but without iteration of the priesthood.

nied) a very high antiquity, they nevertheless fell short of the apostolical age. Scripture is silent about them: nor do I remember that either S. Clement, or S. Ignatius, in his genuine epistles, or S. Polycarp, or S. Justin, or S. Irenæus alludes to, or mentions them in any way, and far less therefore do they insist on them. When they were at last adopted, various countries differed as to the number, and the offices, and the dignity of the several minor orders. Nor can there be refused to any branch of the Catholic Church, the same right and power to lay aside these orders, as to receive and institute them. If again, the necessities of any time should call for it, there can be no just reason why one or more of them should not be resumed, with newly defined duties, not merely nominal, but to be actually performed. This would be a real and not an idle following of the practice of antiquity, by an acknowledgment of the peculiar wants and requirements of the age, and an energetic endeavour to meet and supply them. It is not reasonable to suppose that always the same divinely instituted hierarchy of bishops, priests, and deacons, would be alone sufficient for the work of the ministry: once it was found not to be so, and further aid, upon the authority and under the wisdom of the church, was given: leaving an example to succeeding generations. But when the cause for such additional assistance had passed away: or when, by gradual decay, the original purpose and end of such appointments had either been converted into the increase of an already too great excess of ceremony, and vain superstition, or into the idle retaining of the names only without the offices; it would have been equally unreasonable to have continued, as it were, in mockery, so mere a shadow of what had once been good.

So also, in its corresponding place, "The Institution." Bishop Bonner, in his "Necessary Doctrine," does not in his exposition upon "the sacrament of orders," notice the minor orders.

Before we leave the minor orders altogether, I would take from Ælfric's pastoral epistle, an account of their duties, as they were regarded in the Anglo-saxon age. "Ostiarus is the doorkeeper, who holds the keys of the church. Lector is the reader, who reads in church. Exorcista is an adjutor, who reads over men diseased in mind, and the infirm. Acoluthus is he, who bears the light at God's ministries. Subdiaconus is the under deacon, who bears the chalice and the dish at the mass, and ministers to the deacon."<sup>79</sup>

vas superius, unde lavandis manibus aqua infunditur." Epist. 13. And Joan. de Janua. "Aquimanile, dicitur res, super quod cadit aqua, qua abluuntur digiti sacerdotum post sumptionem corporis Christi." cit. Ducange, Glossarium.

CHAPTER VI.

WE proceed now to deacons, concerning whom, the excerpts of archbishop Egbert, quoting a Carthaginian canon, decree: "Placuit ut ante xxv. annos ætatis, nec diaconus ordinetur, nec virgines consecrentur, nisi rationabili necessitate cogente."<sup>1</sup> But as time went on, an earlier limit was allowed: as is clear from the Pupilla, in a place which specifies also the ages at which the inferior orders might be received: and I therefore quote it. "Ordinandus in exorcistam, lectorem, seu ostiarium debet esse major infante. i. major septennio. Et similiter ille qui primam tonsuram suscipit ordinandus in acolytum debet esse major xiiij. annis. Item major xvij. annis potest ordinari in subdiaconum. Major etiam xix. annis potest ordinari in diaconum: et major xxiv. annis in sacerdotem: et major xxx. annis potest esse episcopus."<sup>2</sup>

As to their disabilities, the chief assumption by deacons seems to have been, the hearing of confessions: this is complained of and prohibited by the Norwich canons of 1257. "Audivimus quoque, quod quidam sacerdotes faciant suos diaconos audire confessiones parochianorum suorum; quod quam sit absurdum non opus est dicere, cum evidenter verum sit, quod diaconis non est tradita potestas, nec quærat ex hoc nisi occasionem aut spatium intendendi negotiis secularibus. Prohemium Dissertation.

... aut penitentias injungant, aut alia sacramenta. The reader will observe, that in the case of the deacon's presuming to hear confessions, it is attributed rather to the idleness or secular ambition of the superior priest: which nevertheless should not excuse the erring deacon: in the following canon, however, of the synod of Exeter, A. D. 1287, we find the deacon altogether forbidden, without the assent of the superior priest, for the offence: "Et cum inferioribus clericis inferioribus et superiores clericis officia nec inferior usurpet officium superioris ac penitentias actibus contingant ecclesiarum officia penitentiarum: firmiter inhibemus, ne inferioribus clericis penitentiasve injungant, nec alia sacramenta aut aliqua officia exercent, quæ nisi superioribus clericis reservata sunt." And we learn from the records of the monastery of Burton, that this canon was inserted one of the diocesan articles of the synod held by Bishop Grosseteste in 1252: "An inferior clericus penitentias vel alia ministrant sacramenta: non liceat: sub excommunicatione."*

The canon in question is not in the original text of the synod of Exeter, but is found in the collection of the diocesan articles of the synod of Burton, which various editions of the canon have so far made it difficult to ascertain in which manner it was made of deacons, as "curates:" whose name might perhaps argue that being "curates" they might hear confessions. But the sense in which deacons could thus be said to be curates in that age, is very different from that in which they are now so often, and especially from the force of circumstances so often, styled curates. I do not remember, nor conceive that it would be easy, to produce an instance of a deacon having the sole charge of a parish in the time of Lyndwood, except for that short time, after presentation to a benefice, before

But, after all, these various canons must have been directed to the unwarranted hearing of confessions: because, in certain cases of great necessity, and in those only, power to do so was given to deacons, by a provincial constitution of archbishop Edmund. “De pœnitentia præcipimus: quod diaconi pœnitentias dare non præsumant, nisi in his casibus: cum sacerdos non potest, vel absens est: vel stulte, vel indiscrete non vult: et mors imminet ægroto.” It would seem to be allowed only that the confession should be heard; no power of giving absolution was granted, or the semblance of it; and in fact, these extreme cases did not place a deacon in a higher position, than, under the same circumstances, a mere layman. For thus Lyndwood says, upon the word “ægroto” in the above: “Qui desiderat confiteri. Tali namque casu potest non solum diaconus, sed etiam laicus confessionem ægroti audire; immo et mulier hoc potest. Et hoc verum, ad ostendendum fidem sacramenti. Sacramentum tamen deficit, quia nullus potest vere absolvere nisi sacerdos.”<sup>6</sup>

I shall add one more particular only, directed towards the proper administration of the blessed Eucharist to the sick: in which the blame must be attributed, it would appear, altogether to the negligence or carelessness of the parish-priest. “Caveant presbyteri, ne ad visitandum infirmos se exhibeant difficiles; — reception of priest's orders. The term curacy is to be understood, as regards deacons, in the sense of “title” or place of ministration to which they were ordained or appointed, and within the li-

nec, sicut a quibusdam hactenus est præsumptum, mitant cum eucharistia diaconos ad infirmos." This is one of the canons of a diocesan synod of Chichester, A. D. 1289.<sup>7</sup>

We must now proceed to some matters connected with the duties and qualifications of the next and higher order, the priests. As to the age, earlier than which they were not to be ordained, I have already spoken, p. cvii. In the middle of the eighth century, the council of Cloveshoo, gives the following admonition: "Octavo monuerunt capitulo: ut presbyteri indesinenter reminiscant, ad quod divina ordinatione præ cæteris promoti sint; quod Dei videlicet ministri et dispensatores mysteriorum Christi vocantur; et tunc 'quæritur inter dispensatores, ut fidelis quis inveniatur;' unde sciant se necessario pro Dei intuitu debere a secularibus negotiis causisque, in quantum prævaleant, vacare; altaris officium divinique cultus obsequium summa intentione persolvere; oratorii domum, et cuncta ad cultum ipsius pertinentia, sub sua cura conservare; lectioni, orationi, missarum celebrationi, psalmisque canendis invigilare."<sup>8</sup> The canon then proceeds to some particular duties in the case of priests attached to monasteries: and is followed by several other canons of no little interest, to which I must be content to refer the student. Extracting one particular only: namely that priests were to learn and be able to expound, in the vulgar tongue, the solemn part of the Liturgy: not only the Creed, and the Lord's Prayer, "sed et sacrosancta quoque verba, quæ in missæ celebratione, et officio baptismi sollemniter dicuntur.” This rule is of much importance, in its bearing upon the Anglo-saxon doctrine of the celebration of the holy Eucharist.

Before we pass on to other details, I would here make an observation on the rite, practised in the English church from the most remote antiquity, of anointing the hands of persons, to be ordained priests. The reader will see in the notes below, frequent remarks upon certain parts of the ordinal, which appear to have been originally introduced into the Anglo-saxon pontificals, from the more ancient Forms of the British church. There is no manuscript extant, of any foreign church, with the exception of the sacramentary of S. Gregory, older than the pontificals of archbishops Egbert and Dunstan, in which this rite is prescribed: in both of those it is ordered, together with unction of the head, which last is not noticed in the sacramentary just named. In some pontificals of the Gallican church, of the 10th century, examined by Martene, it also occurs, and probably was adopted from the already established Anglo-saxon practice. And it is further a very remarkable circumstance, that between the time of S. Gregory and the tenth century, the unction even of the hands was discontinued according to the use of the church of Rome. For in the ninth century, pope Nicolas I. says in an epistle; “Præterea sciscitaris utrum solis presbyteris, an et diaconibus debeant cum ordinantur manus chrismatis liquore perungi. Quod in sancta hac Romana, cui Deo autore deservimus, ecclesia, neutris agitur.”<sup>9</sup>

Prefatory Dissertation.

There are many reasons of English councils, directed to the prevention of an abuse, not unlikely to spread, namely the holding of rectories by persons not in priest's orders. Hence it was enjoined, that all rectors and vicars having cure of souls, should be ordained priests within a certain time after presentation to the benefice, or the presentation would be void. But it seems that some, although they so far obeyed these canons as to escape deprivation, yet neglected their duties and refused to celebrate the holy Communion. I shall quote a statute of the diocese of Exeter in the year 1287, which fully states this practice, and corrects it. "Quoniam audivimus, quod quantum ad rectores ecclesiarum meta poenae statuti infra annum a tempore suscepti regiminis, se fecerint in ministerio ordinari: missarum tamen solennia diffinito celebrare per tempora diuturna; per hoc excusantur quia in predicto statuto nihil cautum de missarum solennibus reperitur: hanc excusationem, qua se excusant quia prius excusant, frivolum reputamus scilicet si prius infra dimidium annum post ordinatum missas celebrare non omittant. Alioquin de beneficiis suis fractas decrevimus, sibi ad satisfactionem suam quae dictam est devote comple-

in his time unction was not observed: by the other, to prove the contrary. The passage is "Nunc enim et ordo clarior levitatem et dignitas amplior severam, et sacratior est unctio sacerdotum, quia crux tua omnium fuit benedictionum." Serm. de passione Domini.

verint; nec postquam semel celebraverint, incipiant tunc cessare; sed sub pœna prædicta frequenter studeant celebrare.”<sup>10</sup>

But except in the cases of persons thus presented to benefices, a very wise rule, if it was fully carried out, (which I should doubt could have been at any time) prohibited priests from undertaking the sole cure of a parish, for one year after their ordination. I again quote the same synod of Exeter. “Cum sit ars artium regimen animarum, illud juvenibus et inexpertis committere valde reputamus absurdum, donec per merita virtutum et experientiam diutinam digni efficiantur ad tanti oneris sarcinam supportandam. Quapropter statuimus, ne quisquam presbyterorum primo ordinationis suæ anno ad curam parochialem ullatenus admittatur; illis tamen duntaxat exceptis, qui tenentur propriis ecclesiis deservire.” And, once more upon this point, in the year 1308, a synodical constitution of Henry Woodloke, bishop of Winchester: “Inhibemus etiam, ne quis sacerdos, exceptis rectoribus aut vicariis ecclesiarum, qui propriis tenentur ecclesiis deservire, primo ordinationis suæ anno, curam parochialem admittat.”<sup>11</sup>

Very early in the ecclesiastical history of the church of England, we find steps taken to prevent priests, wandering about from place to place, and celebrating wheresoever they would. The Dialogue of archbishop Egbert has the following passage. “Interrogatio. Si permittendum est presbyteris sive peregrinis, sive nostri generis, passim ministrare absque conscientia episcopi loci, in cujus diœcesi interim demorantur, maxime sub laicis, nusquam sta-

I shall not delay to extract any of the canons which relate to the duty of preaching, from the time when the council of Cloveshoo, A. D. 747, in its ninth canon ordered every priest carefully and diligently to fulfil it. Upon a point which the Church has always so much insisted on, it does not seem necessary to heap up authorities: I would rather quote the opinion of the great canonist, as to some restrictions with regard to it. "Nota, quod non omnis qui vult prædicare, debet ad hoc admitti. Nam mere laicus nec publice nec private potest prædicare, nec etiam mulier. 23. cl. 1. 1. 1. quod intelligas ascendendo pulpitem, et faciendo sermonem ad populum: loquendo de clericis habes scire, quod papa ubique potest prædicare; episcopi vero ubique possunt prædicare, nisi per diocesanos prohibeantur expresse, juxta illud *Mat. It may appear scarcely necessary to state that severe penalties were attached to the performance of priestly functions by men who had not received the order of the priesthood: but I would quote two examples, in neither of which, however, the punishment is specified. One was brought before the convocation, sitting in S. Paul's, in 1463. "Die sabbati, toto concilio, ut prius, insimul congregato, adductus fuit coram domino et confratribus suis quidam Simon Harrison, apparatu fratris prædicatoris indutus, in ecclesia parochiali de Lamehith, Winton. dioc. per familiares domini suspecte in dicenda missa captus, qui solum, ut publice asseruit et fatebatur tunc ibidem, in ordine acolytus constitutus missas per longum tempus celebravit, idolatriam committendo. Et hoc audito, dominus commisit eum confratri suo Willielmo Winton. episcopo puniendum."<sup>16</sup>

The other example to which I alluded is a very curious one, related in the chronicle of Henry de Knyghton. "Illis diebus (1391) erat quædam matrona in civitate Londoniensi quæ habebat unicam filiam quam instruxit ad celebrandum missam, et erexit altare in cubili suo secreto cum ornatu suo, sicque fecit filiam suam multis diebus vestire se more sacerdotis et ad altare accedere, et pro suo modo missam celebrare: sed cum venisset ad verba sacramenti, prostravit se ante altare et sacramentum non confecit, sed cætera missæ surgens usque ad finem

Et hoc quod hic dicitur, viz. quod irregularis debet abstinere ab executione officii donec fuerit cum eo dispensatum, non solum habet locum in ordinato ad majores ordines, sed etiam ad minores.”<sup>18</sup>

The constitution proceeds to specify several ways in which irregularity and consequent suspension were incurred: for example, homicide, advocacy in causes of blood, simoniacs, schismatics, &c. The whole title, with Lyndwood's gloss, is well worth the consideration of the student, bearing as it does upon the penalties attached to mere suspension, which is not also accompanied with the further penalty of excommunication. The Pupilla has a chapter “de suspensionè ab executione ordinis,” in which the whole subject is very fully and accurately discussed.<sup>19</sup> The different severities of the degrees of suspension are explained; as being either perpetual, or temporary: from a benefice, or from execution of spiritual functions, or from entrance into any church: and I regret that my space will not allow me to do more than thus barely refer to that part of the book.

I should have been glad also to have given, although not so immediately connected with my subject, yet illustrative of it, some account of the various restrictions and rules laid down in the English councils, relating to the daily habits and pursuits and occupations of the clergy: what they might both properly and lawfully engage in, and what they might not: also, some of the many canons which were passed regulating the dress which they should wear. These, however, I must pass by: but in the note below are references to some places in Wilkins, where the matter is entered into:<sup>20</sup> and if the reader examines them, he will certainly acknowledge, that on the present occasion, I could not have done justice to a subject so extensive, and of importance sufficient to justify a detailed consideration in a separate treatise.

I shall, therefore, now proceed to some particulars, relating to bishops. As to their consecration, it was always insisted on, in the church of England, that there should not be less than three bishops present, and assisting. And this from the time, when archbishop Egbert, in his excerpts,<sup>21</sup> quoted the Nicene canon; or up to that earlier age, when British bishops, present at the council of Arles, agreed to this rule. "Ut sine tribus episcopis nullus episcopus ordi-

Lib. vij. cap. 10. It would be an endless task to attempt to refer to the foreign canonists, Van Espen, Bonacina, Thomassin, Sausajus, &c: all of whom treat very largely of the subject.

I extract the following form of citation of a bishop to consecrate and to assist, in the year 1293. "Venerabili in Christo patri, domino. R."<sup>23</sup> Dei gratia London. episcopo, devoti sui H. permissione divina prior ecclesiæ Christi Cant. et ejusdem loci capitulum, salutem, et ad sinceræ devotionis obsequia se paratos. <sup>22</sup> Mansi. Conc. Tom. 2. p. 474.

The clause in the Act 25 Hen. VIII. cap. 20, which required four bishops, was in case the certificate of the election had not been sent to an archbishop; otherwise, two bishops, with the archbishop, were to consecrate. See Gibson, Codex Juris Ecc. p. 111.

As to the times, that is, the periods of the year, at which general ordinations were to take place, both Baronius<sup>2</sup> and Bellarmine<sup>3</sup> have attempted to prove that the "Jeiunia quatuor temporum" as fixed for that purpose, are to be attributed to the days and the authority of the apostles. But there is no evidence whatever, of any weight, in favour of this opinion, whilst on the other hand, there is much in contradiction to it. Not only is there no mention of this fact in the earlier fathers, but there is very ancient authority that Gelasius was the first who limited the seasons of general ordination to certain times of the year. Macrobius says: "Gelasius papa constituit, ut ordinationes presbyterorum, et diaconorum non nisi certis temporibus fieri."<sup>4</sup> So also Rabanus Maurus; "Sacras ordinationes quatuor temporum diebus oportet."

1000. Because it grows from a communion granted by them a few years afterwards in the case of the bishoprics of Bangor, so be consecrated elsewhere that they claimed the privilege of having all bishops of the province consecrated in their cathedral. See ibid. p. 287.

"The dean and chapter of Canterbury," says bishop Goussier, "claim it as an ancient right of that church, that every bishop of the province is to be consecrated in it, or the archbishop to receive from them a license to consecrate elsewhere. And thro' between the years 1283 and 1300 that point was controverted with the chapter, it ended in their favour, and in the further confirmation of the privilege."

"—In Crammer's register, among the fees due to the archbishop and his officers, for confirmation and consecration, we find the following entry. 'Memorand. that no bishop may be consecrated without the church of Canterbury, but by the special license of the dean and chapter under their chapter seal, the fee whereof is 20s. 5d.'" Code Juris Ecc. p. 111. not. rr.

ere fieri, decreta Gelasii papæ testantur.”<sup>23</sup> There is no doubt, however, that the appropriation of certain times of the year, to the solemnities of general ordinations, is of an antiquity reaching, if not to apostolical, at least to almost primitive times. And there are so many reasons, which will easily occur to the reader, why a rule so general and ancient should be if possible observed, that it cannot but be a subject of sincere gratification to every member of the church of England to observe, not only that it is distinctly repeated by the canons of 1604, but that, during the last few years, the practice of our bishops has been (more exactly, than at one period) in accordance with that rule.

But, to return to my more immediate purpose, I proceed to extract some orders upon the point, previous to the sixteenth century. First, the 99th of the often-quoted excerpts of archbishop Egbert: “Presbytero-

extant that Amalarius was mistaken: and that the custom in the primitive ages, at Rome as in all other parts of the Catholic Church, was to ordain at any time of the year, when it was judged desirable or necessary. Mabillon in his Museum Italicum, tom. 2. p. 103, supposes that the frequent custom, certainly observed by some popes, to ordain only in the winter, was on account of the great heat of the summer, and the numerous duties to be fulfilled in the autumn: but Catalani derides this idea. Comment. in Pontif. tom. 1. p. 47.

rum vero et diaconorum in quatuor temporum sabbati scilicet, ut dum hæc ordinatio coram populo agitur sub omnium testificatione electorum ordinatorumque opinio discutiatur."<sup>29</sup> Again, of a council at Winchester, soon after the Conquest, in which canon the "certain times" must be interpreted of the Ember days. "4. Quod ordinationes certis temporibus fiant." And lastly, the Pupilla oculi. "Celebrari possunt sacri ordines generaliter in sabbatis quatuor temporum, et in sabbato ante dominicam in passione et in sabbato sancto paschæ: in aliis autem temporibus nemini licet sacros ordines conferre nisi soli papæ: et si aliis temporibus conferantur ordinati recipiunt ordinem; sed non executionem ordinis. Minores autem ordines licite conferuntur ab episcopis in diebus dominicis et in aliis diebus solennibus, aut festis aliquibus sed non valde multis, ut non videatur generalem ordinationem facere."<sup>31</sup>

Having, in a previous dissertation, (Vol. 1. p. cci.) remarked upon the strict rules which were anciently enforced, that all the sacraments should be freely administered, without charge or demand of money, I shall refer the reader to that place, and to the places from the Concilia which are there cited.<sup>32</sup> These enactments, as regarded the conferring of Holy Orders, were grounded (as it is expressly stated in the 43rd of the excerpts of Egbert) upon the very ancient (so called) apostolical canon. "If any bishop, presbyter or deacon, shall obtain possession of that dignity by money, let both him and the person who ordained him be deposed, and also altogether cut off from communion, as Simon Magus was." And here I would remark, having just cited these excerpts, that the 45th adopts an African canon, "Episcopus absque concilio presbyterorum clericos non ordinet."

Few injunctions were more frequently repeated, or of earlier date, than that every bishop should confine himself, in the discharge of his duties, strictly to his own diocese: I shall now extract a few orders relating to this, which bear upon the power of celebrating ordinations. The second canon of the council of Hertford (Herutford) in the year 673, is general in its object, but important from its early date: "Ut nullus episcoporum parochiam alterius invadat, sed contentus sit gubernatione creditæ sibi plebis."<sup>33</sup> Archbishop Egbert inserts in his excerpts part of a canon (the 16th) of the council of Nice, to the same effect: but I pass on to the 11th canon of the synod of Chal-

But compare a canon, said to be of a council in Ireland, two hundred years before this: "Episcopus quilibet, qui de sua in alteram progreditur parochiam, nec ordinare præsumat, nisi permissionem acceperit ab eo, qui in suo principatu est." Ibid. p. 3.

Undecimo præcipimus, sicut priscis temporibus a sanctis patribus traditum esse reperitur; ut nulli episcoporum liceat alterius parochiam invadere, vel eam aliquid alterius ministerii ad se pertrahere, nec aliquam consecratione ecclesiarum, vel presbyterorum, diaconorumque, nisi solus archiepiscopus, qui caput est eorum episcoporum." In the year 1126 the sixth canon of a council at London. "Nulli episcoporum alterius parochianum ordinare, vel judicare præsumat."

The following provincial of archbishop Wechenda in the year 1229, as given by Lyndwood "Quia quidam clerici desperantes ab episcopis suis ad se properant imperitiam, aut ætatem minorem ad se præsumunt suam a transmarinis episcopis ordinari, vel ordiantur, vel ordinatos se mentiuntur, a quibus episcopis suis deferentes: statuimus eorum ordinationem irritam esse habendam, sub interdicti et excommunicationis inhibentes, ne a quoquam ad sixteenth century. The chronicle of W. Thorn, an ardent partizan of the monks of S. Augustine of Canterbury, is not a little instructive upon this point. However, upon the privilege of that abbey, for example, as regards ordinations, I quote the following: "Præterea quod crisma, et oleum sanctum, consecrationes altarum, ordinationes monachorum et clericorum a quocunque voluerimus episcopo catholico poterimus suscipere, nec ea nobis audeat aliquatenus denegare." Script. X. Tom. 2. p. 1635.

sui officii executionem suscipiantur. But as in the majority of these irregular ordinations, the persons receiving were, probably, oftener alone in fault, and always must have been themselves conscious of, even though the bishop might possibly have known also, the existence of some canonical impediment, we find very frequent penalties levelled against such

A remarkable mandate is extant, of a bishop of Bath and Wells, which deserves our attention. “Radulphus, episcopus Bath. et Well. archidiacono nostro Well. salutem, gratiam, et benedictionem. Abusionibus quorundam episcopos se dicentium—qui licet non missi officium episcopale in nostra diœc. viz. primam tonsuram et minores ordines conferendo, calices et superaltaria consecrando, vestimenta ecclesiastica benedicendo,—ut lucrum extorqueant temporale, in nostrum opprobrium, et contemp- tum, et aliorum perniciosum ex-emplum, absque auctoritate seu licentia aliqua exercere præsumunt, occurrere cupientes, vobis—sub pœna excommunicationis—mandamus, quatenus nullum episcopum, præterquam fratrem Johannem de Langebrugge Buduen. episcopum, suffraganeum nostrum ad hujusmodi speciale officium exercend. sine nostris literis vobis ostensis—admittatis. Inhibeatis insuper—omnibus rectoribus, vicariis, et capellanis—ne tales episcopos recipiant—Citetis insuper, seu citari faciatis peremptorie quemcumque hujusmodi episcopum prætensum, quod compareat coram nobis vel nostro commissario receptor. quod justitia suadebit. Dat. xvi. Jul. 1362.” Wilkins. Conc. tom. 3. p. 49.

I am not aware that if, in contradiction to these canons, a bishop ventured heedlessly or criminally to confer orders, he would incur the following penalty; but I mention it, as being worth notice, and having reference also to the solemnity with which, at his consecration, the proper vestments were put on by the newly elected bishop, and regarded in some degree as conveying a distinctive character. The two cases to which reference is made, are, neglect of consecrating churches, and of punishing criminous clerks: in the first, from the time that he has refused to perform it, being properly required, and not lawfully hindered, “ a dalmaticæ, tunicæ, et sandaliorum usu, donec eam duxerit consecrandam, noverit se suspensum: quæ in pare the “ Ymagines historiarum” of Ralph de Diceto, ibid. p. 671. And Gervase again, for an example, when the archbishop of York was present, and occupied his proper position in a procession. Ibid. p. 1587: and he adds; “ Roffensis vero qui Cantuariensis archiepiscopi capellanus est, prope archiepiscopum subsequetur a tergo.” The statement of the chronicler as to the office of the bishop of Rochester, and above, as to the office of the bishop of Winchester, is contrary to the rule laid down by Lyndwood, (and followed by archbishop Parker, De Ant. Brit. Ecc. p. 32, and later authorities,) “ Habet archiepiscopus Cant. in collegio episcoporum episcopos, Londinensem decanum, Wintoni-

ensem cancellarium, Lincolniensem vicecancellarium, Sarisburiensem præcentorem, Wigorniensem capellanum, Roffensem cruciferarium.” Lib. 5. Tit. 15. Eternæ. verb. tanquam. And it appears that a dispute did arise about this matter, between the bishops of London and Rochester, in the time of Richard I. See Chron. Gervas. Script. X. tom. 1. p. 1586. and Abp. Parker. p. 226.

I had made some collections respecting the disputes between the archbishops of Canterbury and York, which so frequently are mentioned in the old chronicles, and the councils. But the subject is so extensive, that I have been obliged to pass it over altogether.

There was a malady which persons anciently might with themselves of surreptitiously to obtain orders which has long been checked: this arose from the great number of persons who were ordained. I have unfortunately missed a reference to one of the Cotton manuscripts in the British Museum, in which I saw some long contemporary lists of ordinations, with names and other particulars in the fourteenth century. But this is a point upon which easily ample information might be obtained. I doubt not, from existing records in the episcopal registers of the various dioceses, and I shall extract the following only from the diocese of Hereford. In the episcopate of bishop Brantynge there is an ordination performed in Tiverton church by William Courtenay, bishop of Hereford, on the 8th June, 1377, there were ordained three hundred and seventy-four persons: of whom one hundred and

CHAPTER VII.

OFFICE OF INTHRONIZATION.

THE office, which I have placed next to the service of the consecration of a bishop, is that of his inthronization. This will not require of me many observations. Several forms relating to the inthronization of a bishop of Bath and Wells, in the 13th century, have been printed by Wilkins: to which I must refer the student: and another, a letter of summons to certain abbots by archbishop Winchelsey, to attend the solemnity in his own instance.<sup>1</sup>

The dispute which I have already noticed between the bishops of London and Rochester, had regard to the right of inthroning the archbishop: I quote the account given by archbishop Parker, which shews that the controversy once opened, there was no lack of claimants of the privilege, and that it ended in a compromise. "Inthronizandi enim jus Londinensis ut decanus, Roffensis ut capellanus, archiepiscopi sibi vendicavit. His autem litigantibus interponunt se monachi, suumque jus asserunt esse. Tum totus episcoporum cœtus instabat, et ad se tam inthronizationem, quam consecrationem, spectare affirmabant. Hac dissensione turbata aliquantulum pallii suscipiendi ceremonia fuit. Tandem sic composita lis est; ut, in throno sedentis episcopus Londinensis, pallium autem suscipientis episcopus Roffensis, archiepiscopi dextras occuparet."<sup>2</sup> present custom is to send the seals of a deceased bishop to Lambeth, where they are broken up.

The pontifical ring was also anciently sent to the archbishop of Canterbury: in the year 1310, upon the decease of one of the bishops of Ely, the ring was not delivered as it ought to have been; and archbishop Winchelsey issued a writ directed to one Richard de Oteringham, who was administering the spiritualities of the see during its vacancy, in order to obtain possession of it. It begins, "Robertus, etc. Salutem. Cum nuper ad nostram audientiam pervenisset, quod fratres Amisius et Robertus, monachi Elienses, annulum, qui pontificalis vulgariter appellatur, quondam domini Roberti Elien. episcopi defuncti, qui de jure et consuetudine nostræ ecclesiæ Cant. ad nos dignoscitur pertinere, post mortem ejusdem episcopi auctoritate propria occupassent, et detinerent occupatum; vobis dedimus, etc."<sup>5</sup> The monks of Ely, it appears, argued, that the theistic seals: it orders that all archbishops, bishops, abbots, &c., should procure them, with the proper legend and distinctions: and that great care should be taken of them, lest they should fall into unfaithful hands, or be used for false purposes. The student should consult John de Athon upon this constitution, but I am not aware that either he, or Lyndwood, anywhere explains what the practice was with regard to the seals, after a bishop's or other dignitary's decease. Lyndwood in one place, speaking of an authentic seal, says; "Sed quid si episcopus de novo consecratus, vel electus, confirmatus, nondum habet sigillum hujusmodi paratum ad manus, habet tamen sigillum armorum vel signetum, an sufficiat alterum eorum talibus literis apponere? videtur quod sic, dum tamen tale sigillum sit notum." Lib. 5. tit. 5. Reverendissimæ. verb. sigillo. <sup>5</sup> Wilkins. Conc. tom. 2. p. 403. It is possible that the rings of the deceased bishops of Ely alone, were due to the archbishop: and it seems certain that in the century,<sup>9</sup> who have attributed the use of it to S. Peter himself. It seems however to have been introduced about the fifth or sixth century into the Latin church from the East: and Thomassin has not been able to produce any example before the time of Cæsar of Arles about the year 500.<sup>10</sup>

The form of the pall is thus described by Innocent III. “ Pallium fit de candida lana contextum, habet desuper circulum humeros constringentem, et duas lineas sive fascias ex eodem panno ab utraque parte dependentes: quatuor autem cruces purpureas, ante et retro, a dextris et sinistris: sed a sinistris pallium est duplex, simplex a dextris; cui in tres partes conciso tres acus infiguntur (spinas vocant alii) quibus consuitur.”<sup>11</sup>

Episc. tom. 1. p. 256.* And he cites an epistle of Leo the Great, and a passage from Liberatus, to shew that S. Mark received the pall from S. Peter, and with it his patriarchal authority. In the numerous works of that author, we scarcely know which to admire the most; his learning, or his prejudice.

<sup>11</sup> De Myst. Miss. lib. 1. cap. 63. The reader who wishes accurately to examine the subject, as to the first adoption of the pall, how it was originally a royal habit, the office of the benediction, its mystical signification, and other particulars, must consult not only the middle-age ritualists, and our own historians, who very briefly notice it, but Van Espen, *Jus. ## PRELIMINARY DISCUSSION.

It will be observed in the notes below, that an archbishop, translated from one see to another, was obliged to apply to the court of Rome for a new pall: this was on account of the personal character which was attributed to that ornament. Hence Coelestin III. decided in his answer to an enquiry in the subject, "quod non videtur esse conveniens, si pallium tamen alicui commovetur cum pallium in personam non transeat, sed quisque debeat cum eo sicut via movet discretio) sepe fieri."<sup>21</sup> This is introduced into the rubric of the modern Roman pontifical. There are numerous accounts of the burying of archbishops in their vestments, to be found in their Acts, and in the Bollandists: but I remember only one English example in which the pall is expressly mentioned. Catalani says that we are to conclude that S. Dunstan was buried in his pall, because we are told that at the translation of his body, it was found upon examination, that the ring was upon his finger: and therefore the other vestments proper to his dignity. This seems a somewhat hasty inference.<sup>22</sup> However, the following is clear enough: arch-ator, ut subinde assumatur cum procedendum in publicum; deponatur, quando quisque domi apud se est. In sacris ornamentis vox illa ambigua habet significationem; sumitur enim, aliquando pro veste sacra, quæ superinduitur, ut quæd pluviale dicitur, quodque cappa et casula; aliquando pro insigni quodam dignitatis eximie, quod ipsi etiam cappæ casulæque imponitur, sicut pallium reliquis vestibus, vel est pallii ornamentum quoddam et decus." Several very ancient formule are given in the diurnal, upon occasions when the pall was sent from Rome to archbishops, p. 125. These also should be referred to.

a manuscript of some anonymous writer, entitled the Speculum Ecclesie. "Sigillum cereum in modum crucis compactum et aquam benedictam continens super caput defuncti ponimus, quod est signum baptismi et christianitatis suæ, et testimonium quod ipse fidem Christi habuit in mente. Clerici vero ordinati cum illis indumentis in quibus fuerunt ordinati debent et sepeliri, et sacerdos cum illis cum quibus assistit altari, monachus vero cum cuculla sua, quod est professionis suæ signum. Super pectus vero sacerdotis debet poni calix loco sigilli, quidquid sit de oblata : quod si non habetur, stanneus saltem Samius, id est fictilis. Episcopus debet habere anulum, quia sponsus est : cæteri sacerdotes non, quia sponsi non sunt, sed amici sponsi vel vicarii. Item capilli debent clerico tonderi, corona fieri, barba radi." Tom. 2. p. 368.

A very detailed and interesting account of the ancient manner of burying and performing the obsequies of the abbots of S. Albans is given in Matt. Paris' lives, attached to his History. Speaking of one he says, after explaining the way in which the corpse had been previously prepared : "Portabatur igitur corpus a camera quæ dicitur abbatis, ubi expiraverat, in infirmariam ; et ibidem

In the above, there is a reference to a custom or distinction, upon which I take this opportunity of making a remark, as I am not aware that it has been noticed by writers upon the subject. Matthew Paris says, that the pastoral staff was placed under the abbot's right arm. It is well known, that one distinguishing mark, between the mode of carrying this staff, by a bishop or by an abbot, was, that the first turned the crook outwards to denote his jurisdiction over a diocese, the other inwards, towards himself, to denote that his jurisdiction reached over the members only of his own House. But the first moreover carried his staff in his left hand, the latter in his right. And according to this rule, we find many effigies. For example, there is an early monument of an abbot of Westminster, in the cloisters, with his staff in the right hand : (the crook, by the way, outwards.) Again, there is a very interesting account, with a plate, in the Archæologia, of the discovery lately of the body of an abbot of Evesham, who died in 1263 : it was found vested, with a nitio: " amotis distributisque ejus quotidianis vestibus superioribus, sepultus est in ipso, in quo inventus est cilicio, et famularibus interius cilicinis, exterius lineis et in eisdem caligis, et in ipso quo erat habitu monachali Et supra hæc, in ipso eodem in quo ordinatus fuit vestimento, alba quæ Græce poderis dicitur, superhumerali simplici, chrysmatica, mitra, stola, mappula: superque habuit archiepiscopaliter tunicam, dalmaticam casulam, pallium cum spinulis, calicem, chirothecas chalice and paten; and reaching across the body, with the crook turned inwards, over the right shoulder and clasped by the right arm, lay the pastoral staff. Vol. III. p. 306. See also the figure of Adam Islip, in Strutt's Regal Antiq.; and another, in pl. LX. On the contrary, the seals and effigies of bishops represent them carrying the staff in the left hand: as, in Salisbury cathedral, the two bishops and bishop Jocelyn. To compare those in Stothard's monumental effigies. Before I close this note, I would remark that it has been said by some, that an abbot, or dignitary, had a crozier in some churches abroad, and Constantine, tom. I. p. 122. This is a very rare instance of the church of Adam to that purpose: but I cannot say whether it was observed, as a distinction, in England. This thing is certain, that it is not: it was not confined to abbots, because the splendid effigy of bishop John de Sheppy, in Rochester cathedral, has the staff surrounded with a veil. Archæologia, vol. 25, p. 122. Neither probably was it the case with exempt abbots.

Matthew Paris relates also the funeral solemnities of S. Hugh, bishop of Lincoln, in the year 1200. The kings of England and Scotland, three archbishops, and thirteen bishops, with a multitude of clergy, met the corpse. "Quod ipsi reges, cum comitibus et cæteris principibus portaverunt in humeris suis, usque ad atrium cathedralis ecclesiæ. Ad ostium autem ecclesiæ susceperunt illud archiepiscopi præfati et episcopi; et sic per ministerium prælatorum perlatum est usque in chorum, ubi est honorifice pernoctatum.— Dum ipse more pontificum discoperta facie jaceret, mitram habens in capite, chirothecas in manibus, anulum in digito, cum cæteris pontificalibus ornamentis, etc." Hist. p. 172.

annulum, sandalia, pastoralem baculum; quo consuetum est more, quo dignum est honore.”<sup>14</sup>

Although, as I have already said above, the origin of the pall, and its first adoption, as an ecclesiastical ornament, cannot be discovered, yet there is ample evidence, if it was necessary to go into it, proving how eagerly in the middle ages, the bishops of Rome employed it, as an instrument to extend and support their usurpations, and to obtain revenues. Having steadily, as time went on, added now a little and then a little to the unjust claims which they made over the originally independent metropolitans of the English Church, among which the privileges which they pretended to convey or withhold with the pall, were not the least flagrant and unfounded; our histories, as Dr. Inett has said, “from the reign of Innocent III. downward, are very full of the oppressions and most horrible abuses and exactions, which were the consequences of such doctrines.” And he rightly characterizes them as “bold insults (to say no worse) on the rights and authority of the whole catholic church.” Origines Anglic. vol. 1. p. 165.

I shall further cite the following from the chronicle of Gervase: relating to the reception of his pall by archbishop Hubert, A. D. 1193. "Archiepiscopus Cantuariam veniens ab episcopis Angliæ et conventu Cantuariensi honorifice et in osculo pacis vij. idus Novembris susceptus est. Deinde alba indutus et cappa, sequente conventu, nudus pedes incedens, pallium suscipit per manum nuntii Cœlestini papæ. Quo redimitur pallio cum cæteris episcopalibus indumentis, inthronizatus est, et missam celebravit."<sup>16</sup>

The engagement entered into to visit the see of Rome personally or by deputy, within a certain number of years, was deferred often by leave from the pope: and, in some cases, the sovereign himself interfered, and in the form of a humble supplication, requested the time to be prolonged: this was backed by a similar missive directed to the cardinals for their interposition. See Rymer, Fœdera, tom. 2. pars 2. p. 84. and again, p. 127.

of Canterbury. “ Ad honorem Dei omnipotentis, et B. Mariæ virginis, et beatorum apostolorum Petri et Pauli, et domini papæ Cœlestini, et S. Romanæ ecclesiæ, necnon ecclesiæ tibi commissæ, tradimus tibi pallium de corpore Petri sumptum, plenitudinem scilicet pontificalis officii; ut utaris eo infra ecclesiam tuam certis diebus, qui exprimuntur in privilegiis ab apostolica sede concessis.”<sup>18</sup>

ROYAL AND EPISCOPAL RECEPTIONS.

THE next Order, edited in this volume, is that which was appointed to be used upon the occasion of solemnly receiving either at a city, or cathedral, or abbey, any sovereign, legate, cardinal, or bishop. The custom of the clergy of the place, at which such a personage

The frequent reference which the student will find, to the pall being “ de corpore beati Petri,” relates to the circumstance that they were not made (if I may so call it) at the high altar of the church of S. Peter, but at the altar over the supposed tomb of the apostle: and the benediction being completed, the pall was left one night upon that altar. As to the doctrine of the plenitude of the episcopal office being conveyed by it, I extract the following important observations of Van was to arrive, to go forth in procession to meet him, and to conduct him to the church, is of very high antiquity, as may be seen by many accounts of it, to be found in the Acta Sanctorum, or in the collection of lives by Surius: and again, the well known reference made by S. Gregory Nazianzen to the reception of S. Athanasius, after his return from exile, or the procession with which S. Chrysostom met Epiphanius, in the succeeding century.<sup>19</sup>

And, as of bishops, so also we find, in later times, many examples of legates, received with the due solemnities: I quote the words of Matthew Paris, relating the arrival of the legate Otho, whose constitutions afterwards published are so famous, and of such high authority. "Occurrerunt ei episcopi et clerici famosi usque ad litas:—rex autem ei usque ad confinium maris occurrit; et inclinato ad genua ejus capite, usque ad interiora regni deduxit officiose. Et adventantes episcopi, cum abbatibus, et aliis ecclesiarum prelatibus, eum cum omni honore et reverentia, cum processionibus et campanarum classico, receperunt."<sup>20</sup>

<sup>20</sup> Hist. Angl. p. 371. A. D. 1237. This is not the place for me to enter upon the history, and functions, and dignity, of the legates of the church of Rome; I shall merely remind the reader that the canonists make three distinctions of legates: viz. (to adopt the words of Van Espen) "Legati a latere vocantur legati cardinales: quia assumuntur de latere papæ.—Legati missi sunt,

Royal and Episcopal Receptions. cxliii

I would give the following early example in the English church, of the reception of a bishop: the Historia Eliensis, speaking of S. Wulstan, says: "qualis denique vir iste apud Deum semper extiterit, circa vitæ finem evidenter apparuit, quodam enim tempore contigit eum hanc ecclesiam orationis causa visitare, cui fratres loci processionaliter cum magna ut decuit reverentia occurrerunt, cumque jam in ecclesiam fuisset deductus, et in capite processionis episcopali more baculo pastorali staret innixus; subito, etc."<sup>21</sup> Nor does the reader probably forget the account given us by Bede, of Ethelbert's reception of S. Augustine in the open air, for fear of some magical influence: "at illi non dæmonica, sed divina virtute, præditi veniebant, crucem pro vexillo ferentes argenteam, et imaginem Domini Salvatoris in tabula depictam."<sup>22</sup>

From about the twelfth century it was usual to receive all bishops, on their visitations and progresses through their dioceses, with ringing of bells: and there are frequent entries in ancient parish records of payments on that account. A foreign canon gives a just reason for this observance. "Mandamus, et statuimus, quod quotiescunque episcopi per civitates suas, et dioceses transierint, rectores, seu clerici ecclesiarum, qui sciverint, eos per suas parochias transire,

campanus pulsant, seu pulsari faciunt, ita quod populus unire possit et exire, et genua flectere ad benedictionem suscipiendam. I must refer the reader to the appendix to Dugdale's history of S. Paul's cathedral for an "Ordo ad recipiendum episcopum," according to the use of that church, but he does not state at what date.

There are several notices in the chronicles of royal receptions. I extract one only; the place was S. Alban's in the time of Richard II. "Finitis vesperis cum processione solenni obviam regi processum est ab abbate et conventu ad occidentale ostium monasterii, streperaque est honorifice cum pulsationibus campanarum cantuque cum debito quam devoto."<sup>25</sup> These royal visits were not always so acceptable, it would seem, as they ought to have been: the same author tells us soon after: "Cum hæc aguntur, rex Angliæ et regina cum suis Roemis abbatias regni circumvolutantes quibus tanto tristior fuerit eorum adventus, quanto gratius quia et accesserunt in excessivo numero, et non offerre sed auferre venerunt."<sup>26</sup>

But I must not omit one of the latest examples which we have before the reformation, after which

In this "ruinous" progress, the abbey of Bury is especially mentioned as having suffered the severe infliction of a ten days' visit; at an expense, besides other losses, of 800 marks. period the ancient religious ceremonies on such occasions were, of course, no longer observed. In the summer of 1541, Henry VIII. kept his progress, and a contemporary account has been preserved of his entry into Lincoln. We are concerned only with one part of the ceremony, at his approach to the cathedral. "Item, the bushoppe of lyncolne wth all thole Queere and crosse were readye, and stodde in the mynster alonge on bothe sydes the bodye of the churche, gyvinge attend'unce, and when his grace was alyghtid at the weste ende of the mynster, where were ordenyd and spred as well carpett as stooles wth quysseons of clothe of golde, for the kyng's hyghnes, wheron was a crucyfyx laid, and one other on the queenes grace's stoole. ### RECONCILIATION OF A CHURCH.

<sup>27</sup> Archæologia, vol. 23, p. 338. Communicated by Sir F. Madden: who observes, as giving a further interest to this instance; "the queen's guilt (Catharine Howard) it will be remembered, with Thomas Culpeper, was established by evidence of the fatal night she passed at Lincoln." Compare also the very interesting account of a reception of Henry VI. at Bury S. Edmund's, from a register of that abbey: also printed in the Archæol. vol. 15. p. 66.

 necessary when unhappily the sacred building had been polluted by bloodshed, or the commission of some impurity or profanation, or, by the burial of an excommunicated person; or again, when a great portion of the church might happen to have been destroyed by fire or other accident.<sup>28</sup> Durand says and still more than his usual judgment; "Fit revivificatio ad exemplum et terrorem, ut videlicet, videntes exterrantur, quia in illis peccavit, propter peccatum illius in mari et purgari, existiment quantum propter suorum delictorum expiationem sit laborandum."<sup>29</sup>

Rebaptismation, in these cases, never was permitted and this rule was based upon the mystical resemblance which consecration was supposed to have to Holy Baptism. It is fully stated in the Decretum, Dist. C. lvi. under the authority of a pseudo-Nicene canon: "Quis quisquis a qualicumque sacerdoti in nomine Patris etc. fuerit baptizatus, non debet iterum baptizari, sed si in nomine Dei dicatus iterum consecratus est." This canon is quoted, after Gratian, by almost every writer on this subject, wherefore I have introduced it; and although not genuine, as attributed to so high a source, yet the principle of it was universally acknowledged from a very remote antiquity. For St. Gregory in one of his epistles places together cases of doubtful baptism, confirmation, and consecration of a church; deciding that each is to be performed

I quote from Matthew Paris, (ad an. 1173) the account of the suspension of the celebration of Divine Service in the cathedral of Canterbury, after the murder of archbishop Becket. “ Post mortem beati Thomæ martyris fere anno integro, ecclesia Cantuariensis a divinis cessans obsequiis, continuis perstitit in lamentis, subversum est ecclesiæ pavementum, sonus est campanarum suspensus, nudati sunt parietes ornamentis, et sic quasi in cinere et cilicio exequias in tristitia et mœrore persolvit. Sed tandem ad matris suæ Dorobernensis ecclesiæ vocationem, in festo sancti Thomæ apostoli, suffraganei convenerunt episcopi, ut ecclesiam, longa suspensione consternatam, juxta mandatum domini papæ, in statum pristinum reformarent. Bartholomæus igitur Exoniensis episcopus, ad petitionem conventus, missam celebraturus solennem, et sermonem ad populum habiturus, sic exorsus est: ‘ Secundum multitudinem dolorum meorum in corde meo, consolationes tuæ lætificant animam meam.’ ”

Upon the question how far a church and its churchyard were mutually influenced in regard of a desecration, I quote Van Espen. “ Polluta ecclesia, cœmeterium si ei fuerit contiguum, censebitur quoque pollu-

There were some difficulties in deciding whether, if the altar was destroyed or removed, a reconsecration of the church would be required. The later practice (as now observed, I believe, by the church of Rome) was against it. This appears to have been the received opinion in the time of the author of the Pupilla: who adopts the rule, "propter altaris fractionem aut destructionem vel mensæ amotionem, non reconsecratur ecclesia, sed solum altare."<sup>23</sup> But S. Anselm thought otherwise, and the practice of the church of England, we must conclude, in his day was also contrary. He is replying to a question upon the point, put to him by an abbot: "In hoc omnes concordant quod violato principali, tota ecclesia cum altari iterum consecranda est: nec ecclesia consecranda est sine consecratione altaris, aut principalis, aut alicujus alterius in eadem ecclesia."<sup>24</sup>

cited the passage, as illustrative of the then practice of the English church. S. Anselm not only however gives his decision, but the reason of it: he continues in the same epistle: "Altare non fit propter ecclesiam, sed ecclesia propter altare: et ideo violato principali altari, jam non videtur esse ecclesia quia non est illud, propter quod ecclesia construitur et consecratur. Quapropter cum illud fit novum, recte videtur cum

The archbishop further says: "Si aliqua pars ecclesie destructa reficitur, aut nova sit altari immoto, aqua tantum ab episcopo benedicta aspergendam dicunt." And upon this point, I shall also quote the Pupilla. "In tribus casibus debet ecclesia dudum consecrata iterum consecrari. Primus casus est quando dubitatur an fuerit consecrata, an non: et hoc quia non apparet aliqua scriptura aut instrumentum de dotatione ipsius ecclesie: in libro vel columna vel tabula marmorea, vel hujusmodi: nec ad hoc apparet aliquis testis qui deponere possit de visu vel etiam de auditu. Secundum est si ecclesia exusta fuit ita quod parietes sint combusti et disrupti, vel notabiliter etiam decrustati seu devastati, in toto vel in majori parte. Secus si totum tectum exustum fuerit. Tertius est si ecclesia funditus sit dirupta et deinde ex toto reparata: sive ex eisdem lapidibus sive ex aliis. Si vero non simul sed successive omnes parietes ruerent, vel dirimerentur, et etiam non simul sed successive et particulatim reparati sive renovati essent: non esset de novo consecranda ecclesia. Quia eadem ecclesia intelligitur ante reparationem et post: sed tunc debet reconciliari per aspersionem aquae exorcisatæ.—Item si ecclesie consecratæ quid addatur ad longitudinem vel ad latitudinem non ideo reconsecrabitur: quia sacrum trahit ad se non sacrum. Sed sufficit si aqua exorcisata aspergatur." <sup>35</sup>

Bishop Gibson cites several examples of reconciliation of churches from the archiepiscopal registers in the 17th century: I

It was formerly allowed according to the use of some churches that a priest might perform this office of reconsecration. But I think it probable that in the later centuries at least the English church observed the more general rule which restricted it to the bishop of the diocese or to another bishop with his license. The office itself as the reader will observe, suppose the presence of the bishop, equally as in the solemnity of a consecration. It is likely that the express declaration of Gregory IX. in the 13th century, would have been interpreted:—Aqua per episcopum benedicta ex alia reconsecrari posse per alium episcopum non debemus: per sacerdotes simpliciter hoc fieri de cæteri prohibemus:—quia hoc episcopus committere valeat que jurisdictionis extant que ordinis tamen episcopalis sunt non potest inferioris gradus clericis de mandare.” *

quote the following which he gives, of reconsecration in the time of archbishop Abbot. “When the church of Southmailling had not only been polluted (per bestias et animalium dircersorum generum, aliisque modis profanata) but was also new-built, and then used for divine offices without new consecration: archbishop Abbot interdicted the minister, churchwardens, and parishioners, ab ingressu ecclesie—donec ecclesia præfata, et cæmeterium ejusdem, per nos, aut alium auctoritate nostra munitum, canonicè et legitime consecrata fuerint: prout jura et sanctiones ecclesie in ea parte editæ prestant.” Codex juris Ecc. p. 190.

* In cap. ix. r. de consecratione ecclesie. Cf. Castaldus. Præri Cerem. Lib. 2. §. xi. The Pupilla in the extract above, does not appear to make any distinction between the “aqua benedicta” to be used for this, or any other ceremony. But from what Van Espen says, in the place cited before, §. xx, this ought to have been “aqua consecrata:” that is by a bishop, and mixed with ashes a view which is borne out by the rubric of the office below.

To what extent priests might confer benedictions, has been already discussed in a previous dis-

The offices of benediction of a processional or military banner, and of an episcopal seal will sufficiently explain themselves. The practice of consecrating military standards is very ancient: Charles Martel is said to have received one, consecrated and sent to him by pope Gregory III. William the conqueror, says Ingulph, "præpropera [f. proposita] querela papam consuluit, et ab eo animatus etiam vexillum legitimæ victoriæ pro munere accepit."<sup>7</sup> The prior of Hexham, in his history of the battle of the Standard, in 1135, not only relates how the holy banner of S. Peter was delivered to the barons by the archbishop of York, but also as follows: "Mox autem aliqui eorum in medio cujusdam machinæ quam ibi adduxerant, unius navis malum erexerunt, quod Standard appellaverunt: unde Hugo Eborac. archidiaconus:

Militiæ probitas vincere sive mori.'

In summitate vero ipsius arboris quandam argenteam pixidem cum corpore Christi, et sanctorum Petri apos-sertation: (vol. 1. p. ccl. etc.) and I think it of sufficient interest to add the following passage from Catalani, in which the opinions of the later canonists are briefly summed up. "Ratio differentiæ cur episcopus possit inferiori presbytero, ea quæ sunt jurisdictionis committere, non vero ea quæ sunt ordinis, illa est: quia ea quæ sunt jurisdictionis non ita hærent personæ episcopi, ut ea quæ sunt ordinis, quæ episcopus in consecratione assequitur; quæ-que ita episcopi propria sunt, ut ab eo cedi non possint alii quam episcopo; coepiscopoque cedantur, non ut alii, sed ut alteri ipsimet propter vinculum et necessitudinem sacerdotii, quæ episcopos omnes velut unum habet, omnesque ecclesias velut unam colligit." *In Pontif. #### FORM OF DEGRADATION.

THE antiquity of the punishment of Degradation, the order of which is edited in the present volume, is so well known to every reader of ecclesiastical history that I need not delay upon it. The Apostolical canons, and those of Nice, of S. Basil, and of Peter of Alexandria, all prove the universality of the practice and although the severity of it differed at various times and in various churches, some degrading altogether, some only from a higher to a lower order, yet as a mode of punishment, it seems everywhere and at all times to have been acknowledged and inflicted.<sup>29</sup>

Both theologians and canonists not unfrequently confound deposition, and degradation: and indeed in one sense, perhaps the most ancient one, they may be regarded as the same; but strictly, in later practice, there was a difference between the two. Simple deposition prohibited a clerk either from exercising the powers of his order, or any ecclesiastical office; or from receiving the revenues of his benefice: but it did not remove him from the spiritual and subject him to

<sup>29</sup> A good general account may be found in Bingham, Antiquities, Book vi. cap. 2. But the student will do well to consult Martene, de ant. ecc. rit. 2. p. 317, and to examine the canonists, especially Van Espen, Jus Eccles. par. 3. tit. xj., and the notes of Balsamon and Zonaras, Bevereg. Pandect.; upon the conflicting canons of Nice and Chalcedon: the latter of which would not permit the more modified form of degradation, from a higher order to a lower.

ay jurisdiction. On the contrary, degradation included the infliction of all the penalties which accompanied deposition, and committed the offender also to the power of the temporal courts; depriving him of all the privileges and immunities attached to the clergy.

The settled form as it is below, was but of late introduction: and we have no records in the earliest pontificals which are extant, of the manner in which, very anciently, this solemnity was performed: still, it is scarcely probable, that no form or order was observed. I quote the following from Catalani. "Consuetsse depositionis sententiam calamo Christi sanguine intincto desumpto è sacro calice scribi, duo extant insignia exempla apud scriptores ecclesiasticos. Alterum refert Theophanes, ubi ait, Theodorum papam eo ritu sententiam depositionis contra Pyrrhum scripsisse: alterum narrat Nicetas in vita S. Ignatii patriarchæ Constantinopolitani, ubi depositionem Photii describit." <sup>40</sup>

I shall therefore, to be as brief as possible, confine myself to one or two illustrations of this office, relating to the English church. Upon the necessity of a certain number of bishops to be present on the occasion, we have in Wilkins a bull directed to cardinal Wolsey, dispensing with it; and that, on account of the difficulty of collecting the proper number, he might authorize one bishop to degrade criminous priests, "adjunctis secum seu sibi assistentibus duobus abbatibus, seu dignitates seculares in cathedralibus seu collegiatis ecclesiis obtinentibus." <sup>41</sup> In the same collection, is the full order, as it was to be observed at the degradation of archbishop Cranmer: ending with the usual formula, upon delivery to the civil power, "Domine iudex, rogamus vos cum omni affectu, quo possumus, ut amore Dei, pietatis et misericordiae intuitu et nostrorum interventu precaminus, miserrimo humillum mortis, vel mutilationis periculum inferas." I must say, that notwithstanding the construction which is justly and properly to be put upon this clause in many cases, evidencing the fulness of mercy and pity which befits the Church of Christ, yet in the instance of archbishop Cranmer, and many others in that day, it was nothing but a bitter and disgraceful mockery. The ministers and rulers of the Church could not canonically themselves inflict the punishment of death; but they knew well, what would be the sure effect of their delivering up of men, whom they had condemned as heretics, to the civil power. They were delivered, not to be forgiven, not even to be mercifully dealt with, but to receive at the hands of others a most sure and barbarous punishment. We can look upon such a recommendation, in no other light than we would now regard the conduct of a judge, who, having ship of the divorce might alone, with two priests, deprive or deject. "Quando cuiquam vel digne dignitas vel eripi beneficium ecclesiasticum formula deprivationis debet, principio proprius illius episcopus ad se rite evocet: deinde ad reliquum omne negotium tractandum episcopus ad alios et alios ad se doctos et instructos presbyteros accinet, quorum autoritate et decreto stat placet." De depriv. cap. 3. The maxim upon which the ancient rule was founded, was: "Spiritalia facilius construuntur, quam destruuntur; quia solus episcopus dat ordinem, quem solus tollere non potest." Gibson. Codex. p. 1068.

passed sentence, should render the criminal into the hands of the executioner, and with every outward sign of solemn supplication, entreat that that sentence might not take effect, which he had himself decreed. Let the reader examine a writ “de hæreticis comburendis,” now it speaks of the church having done all that was in her power: and therefore “quod sancta mater ecclesia non habet ulterius,—tibi præcipimus firmiter injungentes, quod præfatos, etc., statim post receptionem præsentium apud villam nostram de B. — coram populo igni committi, et in eodem igne realiter comburi facias, in hujusmodi criminis detestationem, aliorumque christianorum exemplum manifestum.” Or again, let him remember that about the year 1521, among a number of doctrines condemned as heretical and pestiferous, was this: “Hæreticos comburi est contra voluntatem Spiritus.”<sup>43</sup>

In the chronicle of John, abbot of Peterborough, we have the following cases under the year 1222: he is speaking of the famous council at Oxford; “In concilio illo sacerdos quidam et diaconus sunt degradati a domino Cantuariensi archiepiscopo: sacerdos pro homicidio, diaconus pro sacrilegio et furto. Diaconus alius, qui ad Judaisimum a fide apostataverat, et se fecerat circumcidi, extra ecclesiam degradatus fuit a domino Cantuar. coram populo, et post degradationem traditus iudicio laicalis curiæ, igne comburitur. In degradando, cum archiepiscopus casulam, vel stolam, vel anulū, nūlī baculū pastoralis extremitate sullevando amoveret. hinc terminus usus est: Exantoramus te.”<sup>44</sup>

 From an instance related of the deposition of an abbot of Westminster, by Matthew Paris, we may conclude, that in such cases, the breaking of his official seal formed a part of the solemnity. “Illis diebus per prætoriam legarum depositus est Radulphus abbas Westm. per .N. abbatem de Wastham, missum ex parte legum. fracto ipsius sigillo in capitulo.”<sup>45</sup>

As to restitution, after deposition or degradation, Martene in the place above cited, quotes a canon of the 4th council of Toledo: “Episcopus, presbyter, aut diaconus, si a gradu suo injuste dejectus in secunda synodo innocens reperiatur, non potest esse quod fuerat, nisi gradus amissos recipiat coram altario, de manu episcopi orarium, annulum, et baculum; si presbyter, orarium et planetam; si diaconus, orarium et albam; si subdiaconus, patenam et calicem. Sic et reliqui gradus ea in reparationem sui recipiant, quæ cum ordinarentur perceperunt.”

of Healing; the Form of Consecrating Cramp-rings; and some English Forms of Exhortation before communion, and at the visitation of the sick. These will require only a few brief remarks.

As regards the "Forms of bidding prayer," I would refer the reader to a little volume, published in Oxford a few years ago, under that title, in which he will find a large collection of them, of various dates, from the 14th century down to the present time. These have been obtained, by much research, from very curious sources; and an useful introduction is prefixed by the editor, the Rev. H. O. Coxe. The Form which I have now printed is not only different from any hitherto published, but it is especially valuable and important, as being that which was used in the cathedral itself of the diocese of Sarum. I have thought it right to retain some of the names, of bishops and others, which add a further interest to the form, and serve to identify it.

The form of Healing is the Latin form, with an English title, and English rubrics, published "by his majesty's command," in 1686. It is stated to be that which was "used in the time of King Henry VII." I am not aware that it has since that reign been printed, nor do I know any edition except the one now lying before me, in 4to. The form entirely in English, prayers as well as rubrics, occurs often in the Common Prayer books of the reigns of Charles I. and II., James II., and queen Anne: it was also printed separately, in 12mo., in the reign of James II. These English forms all vary: and a new one appears to have been drawn up for each sovereign. Bishop Sparrow reprinted that of the reign of Charles II.<sup>46</sup>

The office of Blessing Cramp-rings is printed from a manuscript in my possession, of about the year 1685, bound up with an edition in Latin, of the form of healing. I am not aware of any other copy existing of this office, in English, and it seemed therefore desirable to preserve the record of so curious a ceremony. The Latin form as drawn up for queen Mary, in 1554, is printed by Barret,* and by Wilkins.†

On the flyleaf of the volume of which I have spoken is the following memorandum. "In ancient times it was a custom with the kings of England on Good Friday, to halow, with great ceremony, certain rings, the wearing of which was believed to prevent the falling sickness. These rings were called cramp-rings, and the MS. in this volume is the service dedicated to their consecration. In Borde's Breviarie of health [1547], speaking of the cramp, we are told that "the kynge's maicstie hath a greate helpe in the matter, in halowing cramp-rings, and so given without money or petition." Lord Berners, the translator of Froissart, when ambassador to the emperor Charles V. wrote from Saragossa "to my lorde cardinall's grace," in 1518, for some "crampe rynges, with trust to bestowe theyme well, with God's grace."

In the appendix to the very valuable collection of Accounts of Churchwardens, etc., printed in the year 1797, is a list of the New-years gifts presented by queen Mary in 1556: among which we find; "Item, deliuerid by the Queins commandement—to the said Robert Raynes, in broken golde, to make crampe rings: etc. Item, more deliuerid the same time, to make cramp ringes, in broke plate of silu' theise parcelles, etc."<sup>49</sup>

I have only now to add, that all the offices in this volume, except where otherwise stated in the notes below, are edited from the same manuscript, a Pontifical of the Use of Sarum, described in the first volume of this work (p. cxvii) and from which several of the Offices in that volume, have also been taken. (See p. ccxcvij.)<sup>50</sup>

also one of the most curious." Literary anecdotes. vol. ix. p. 196. Copies are in the Bodleian and Museum libraries.

In the accounts of the 7th year of Henry IV., occurs the following entry "Die parasceves—in denariis solutis pro eisdem oblationibus reassumptis, pro annulis medicinalibus inde faciendis. xxv. s." cit. Archæol. Journal. vol. 4. p. 78. Bishop Gardiner is said, in a letter to Bishop Ridley, to have spoken of such rings, as endued "by the special gift of curation ministered to the kings of this realm." ibid. vol. 3. p. 359.

Ordo Novum Regem in Regno Constituendi.<sup>1</sup>

“Incipit consecratio regis, quem de conventu seniorum per manus producant duo episcopi ad ecclesiam, et clerus hanc decantet antiphonam duobus episcopis præcipientibus. ‘Firmetur.’ etc.”

In the same volume is contained the order of the coronation of K. Henry I. This begins with the following rubric, and with it agree another MS. in the same collection, Tiberius, B. viij.; the Winchester pontifical; an imperfect Sarum MS. in the Bodleian, Rawl. C. 450; and a MS. pontifical, also imperfect, in Trinity College, Dublin. MS. B. 3. 6.

“Incipit consecratio regis. Consecrandum regem de conventu seniorum duo episcopi per manus producant ad ecclesiam, et chorus decantet antiphonam: ‘Firmetur’ etc.”

The order for Edwd. II. (Bodl. MS. Rawl. C. 425.) has a longer rubric, viz. “Ordo novum regem in regno constituendi.

vestibus, et caligis tantummodo calciato. His peractis, ordinetur in ecclesia per archiepiscopos, episcopos, abbatem, et conventum Westmonasterii, et alios, processio in cappis sericis, cum textis, et thuribulis, et aliis quæ processioni conveniunt. Et sic induti processionaliter regi futuro occurrant in palatio antedicto, et sic ipsum processive in ecclesiam ducant, ipsoque introducto atque in pulpito in sede sibi apta collocato, hæc antiphona ab omnibus decantetur: 'Firmetur.' etc."

With this agrees the Exeter pontifical: except in its title; which is somewhat singular. "Coronatio regis secundum consuetudinem ecclesiæ Westmonasteriensis."

And an imperfect English pontifical in the British Museum, Harleian MS. 561, begins with a still more particular reference to the Westminster muniments. "Hic est ordo secundum quem rex debet coronari, pariter et inungi, secundum cronicas et registra in abbatia Westmonasterii inventa."

I have no doubt that the "textus" spoken of above, was some splendid copy of the Four Gospels, or of the selected Gospels, which was specially preserved at Westminster to be used either on this great occasion only of a coronation, or at other very solemn processions. Or possibly, it was the copy of the Gospels, upon which the coronation-oath was to be taken. I have made some remarks upon this, in the preliminary dissertation: and I would also refer the reader to the dissertation on Service Books, Vol. I. p. liij, and to the extract from Giraldus, in the "Supplement" to p. lvij.

<sup>2</sup> The custom of assembling the archbishops and bishops of the realm is as ancient as the office itself of a Coronation: it has been always held to be necessary not only that the new sovereign should be crowned by the Primate, or a Bishop appointed by him, but also with as large an attendance of the clergy, more especially of the highest degree, as could be obtained. Peter Damian proves that this was not confined to England only: he says, in a passage of his lxix th Sermon, cited by Catalani: "Cum enim tantæ nobilitatis sanguis vel genere, vel nobilitate consecratur in regem, religio cum nobilitate totius regni viribus convocatur. Astat hinc primatum, metropolitanorum, et episcoporum gloriosa societas: illic ducum, comitum, castellanorum, non spernenda nobilitas. Procedit medius homo super homines regnaturus constitutus agmine personali."

The Liber Regalis omits the sentence "sciscitarique — in-

"Metropolitano interim in cathedra sua residente ante altare more episcopali. Coram ipso residebit princeps coronandus in cathedra decenti sibi præparata ex adverso. Finito quidem sermone ad plebem, metropolitanus vel episcopus eundem mediocri distinctaque voce interroget, si leges et consuetudines. etc."

<sup>9</sup> "Sessio regis." Marginal note. Sar. Pontif. I may remind the reader that the Roman pontifical appoints here a set sermon or admonition to be made, not to the people in order to ask their consent, but to the king concerning the duties of his station. "Quibus sic sedentibus, postquam aliquantulum quieverint, metropolitano coronandum regem admonet, dicens, 'Cum hodie,' etc." Pontif. Rom. The latter part of this admonition is similar to the "admonitio episcoporum ad regem" of the text, presently. It is probable that the rubric immediately following that admonition "Adjiciantur prædictis," etc., was intended to give scope for a more exact imitation of the Roman use, if it was thought desirable.

<sup>13</sup> This petition has been omitted in the late Forms. It was observed in the coronation of King James I. (of Charles I. according to the very obscure and confused account in Prynne, Signal Loyalty, p. 270) and of Charles II. I extract the form from the last mentioned Order, as it is given by Walker. "After which [i. e. the promises] the B<sup>p</sup>. of Rochester read the Petition of the Bishops in these words.

"Our Lord and King wee beseech you to grant and preserve unto vs, and the Churches Comited to our Charge all Canonically priviledges, and due Law and Iustice, and that you would protect and defend vs as every good King in his Kingdome ought to be a Protector and Defender of the Bishoppes and Churches vnder their Government.

"The King Answered:

"With a willing and devout heart I promise and grant my pardon, and that I will preserve and mayneteyne to you, and the Churches comitted to yo<sup>r</sup>. Charge all Canonically Priviledges and due Law and Iustice, and that I will be yo<sup>r</sup>. Protectour and Defender to my power by the assistance of God as every good King in his Kingdome ought in right to proprivilegium ac debitam legem atque iustitiam conseruetis, et defensionem exhibeatis, sicut rex in suo regno debet unicuique episcopo, abbatibus,<sup>14</sup> et ecclesiis sibi commissis.

Animo libenti, et devoto, promitto vobis et perdoneo, quia unicuique de vobis et ecclesiis vobis commissis, canonicum privilegium et debitam legem atque iustitiam servabo, et defensionem quantum potuero, adjutect and defend the B<sup>ns</sup>. and Churches under their Government."

This petition does not occur in the earlier Forms of K. Ethelred, Henry I. and Edward II.

I extract the following from the important "Devyse" for K. Henry VIII. so often alluded to in the dissertation. "Then foloweth the petitions of the bisshoppes to the kyng, which by the bisshop of Lincoln shall be openly redde in good and distinct voice, seying: Domine rex. Sir King, we aske of you to perfytely geven and graunted vnto vs, that ye shall kepe vnto vs and eche of vs, and to all the churches that beth geven and comytted vnto vs and eche of vs, the priuileges of the lawe canon and of hooly church, and due lawe and rightfulnessse, and vs and them defende as a doughty and Christen King ought to do. And itt like wise to graunte and do thurgh all your Reame to euery bishop, abbot, and all the churches to them comytted.

"The kyng shall aunswer. Libente animo. With good will and deuoute soule, I promytte and perfytely graunte that to you and euery of you, and to all the churches to you comytted, I shall kepe the priuileges of the lawe of canon and of holy Church: and lawe and rightfulness: and I shall in as moche as may be, by reason and right defende you and euery of you bisshoppes and abbotts thurgh my Reame: and all the churches to you and them comytted. All these things and euery of theym, I Henry king of Englande, promytte and conferme to kepe and obserue, so helpe me God, and thise holy Euangelists by me bodily touched upon this hooly awter."

vante Domino, exhibebo, sicut rex in suo regno unicuique episcopo, abbatibus, et ecclesiis sibi commissis, per rectum exhibere debet.<sup>15</sup>

dicto rege<sup>17</sup> interim ante altare supertapetis et quissinis, per regios ministros decenter ibidem collocatis, humiliter prostrato.

Finito vero hymno, sequatur hæc oratio :

<sup>15</sup> In the modern Roman pontifical, among the other duties explained to the new sovereign in the "admonition" before spoken of, note 9, is this: "Christianam religionem, ac fidem catholicam, quam ab incunabulis professus es, ad finem usque inviolatam retinebis, eamque contra omnes adversantes pro viribus defendes." And how ancient this practice was, may be concluded from the iijrd. canon of the sixth council of Toledo. "Quisquis succedentium temporum regni sortitus fuerit apicem, non ante conscendat regiam sedem, quam inter reliqua conditionum sacramenta pollicitus fuerit, hanc se catholicam non permissurum eos (nempe Judæos) violare fidem, etc." And it thus concludes. "Ergo postquam ordine præmissis, ad gubernacula accesserit regni, si ipse temerator hujus extiterit promissi, sit anathema, maranatha, in conspectu sempiterni Dei, et pabulum efficiatur ignis æterni."

There is certainly no express stipulation to this effect in the ancient English forms; nor is there in the modern Roman use: although Catalani (who quotes also the above canon), rather hastily, as it seems to me, concludes that it is to be gathered from the promise of the new sovereign, in the "professio regis" which immediately succeeds, and which is couched in very general terms. Cf. Comment. in Pontif. Rom. tom. i. 378.

De Benedictione et

Te invocamus, Domine sancte, Pater omnipotens æternæ Deus, ut hunc famulum tuum. N. quem tua divinæ dispensationis providentia in primordio plasmatum, usque hunc præsentem diem juvenili flore læ tantem crescere concessisti, eum tuæ pietatis donditatum plenumque gratia et veritate, de die in diem coram Deo et hominibus, ad meliora semper proficere facias, ut summi regiminis solium, gratiæ superna largitate, gaudens suscipiat, et misericordiæ tuæ mur ab hostium adversitate undique munitus, plebem sibi commissam, cum pace propitiationis et virtute victoriæ feliciter regere mereatur. Per Christum Dominum.

Ut præsentem famulum tuum in tua pietate, justitia, et sanctitate, confirmare et conservare digneris.

<sup>19</sup> The position of the litany in this Office has differed much, at various times and in various countries. But the antiquity of its use at some period or other of the ceremony is proved by the very ancient Ordo Romanus, which commands: "ut cuncto ecclesiæ pavimento tapetibus et palliis contacto, ibi rex humiliter totus in cruce prostratus jaceat cum episcopis, et presbyteris, hinc inde prostratis, cæteris in choro litaniam breviter psallentibus." The "breviter" refers to the restriction which is afterwards enjoined, that only twelve Apostles, and as many martyrs, confessors, and virgins, should be invoked. The phrase "totus in cruce" would appear to mean, with arms extended. The student will observe that in the text, only the bishops are directed to prostrate themselves with the king.

Oratio.

is omitted. The prayer is very ancient: not only to be traced to the earliest MS. which we now have of the Anglo-Saxon ceremonial, but it is also in the old "Ordo Romanus." I may add, that in some early foreign pontificals, this prayer is to be said aloud by the archbishop, and "voce submissa" by the other bishops: "ad tollendam scilicet confusionem (observes Catalani), non vero quod in ea vocis submissione aliquid arcani mysteriive contineatur."

tutis regimen administret,<sup>23</sup> et ad veræ fidei pacisque concordiam eorum animos, te opitulante, reformet, <sup>23</sup> “ administret, ut regale solium, videlicet Anglorum vel Saxonum scepro, non deserat, sed ad pristinæ fidei, pacisque, etc.” ibid. This passage is remarkable: and it is a very curious circumstance, that the famous manuscript, (now in the British Museum, Cotton, Tiberius B. viij.) of the coronation service of Charles V. of France, contains the same sentence, with not a less plain reference to the Anglo-Saxons. The words are these: “ ut regale solium videlicet Saxonum, Merciorum, Nordanchimbrorum scepra non deserat.” This fact has been remarked by Selden in his Titles of Honour, p. 177. 189. and he argues very justly that the French Order owes its origin to the more ancient Forms used in this country. It nevertheless is somewhat more than strange, that they who adopted and revised to suit their own circumstances our English Office, should have omitted to correct this passage in the prayer. The numberless instances of agreement, even verbal, which occur between the ancient English forms and the French, would have proved a common origin: such an argument as the present proves more; viz. this: England can claim the honour of having given her Order of Coronation to the kings and people of France.

In the Appendix to the sacramentary of S. Gregory (Opera tom. 3. p. 258.) Menard has printed the “ Ritus olim observatus in unctione regum Francorum: ex codice Ratoldi Abbatis.” In that Order, this prayer occurs and after the words “ semper i cedat” above, is the following, not less worthy of notice than the corresponding reference in the Service of Charles V. “ ——— i cedat, et totius Albionis ecclesie deinceps cum plebibus sibi annexis, etc.” The reader will at once see, that the argument in the preceding paragraph of this note is strongly confirmed by this reference to England: but it would not be just to omit Menard’s own remarks upon it. Probably he was not aware of the existence of the Cotton MS. or he would have argued doubtless that Charles V. was also crowned King of England; as indeed, he does seem to pretend with respect to Henry IV. if I understand him rightly: even although, as he quaintly says, he could discover no record of the original fact extant. He says, “ Quæ quidem verba (Albionis ecclesiam) satis manifestant aliquem Francorum regem id temporis in Anglorum regem unctum fuisse: quod tamen est difficile scitu, cum nihil tale in historicis antiquis cum Francorum, tum An-

glorum repereris, per quos huic difficultati lucem afferre quis possit. Nemini autem dubium est quin Albion, cujus hic mentio est, sit Britannia major. Id testantur veteres omnes recentioresque geographi.—Quis fuerit autem ex regibus Francorum sub hac formula in regem Anglorum unctus, dicere obscurum est. Ex hoc tamen apparet antiquum jus regibus Francorum in regnum Angliæ fuisse.” And the same writer adds in a note, a suggestion in proof of his theory, which is demolished by the Order of K. Ethelred; “Forte consecratio hæc in Ludovici IV. inauguratione fuit adhibita, qui cum ob Ogivam matrem, ex Angliæ regum stirpe esset oriundus, in spem hujus regni vocatus potuit simul ungi in regem Angliæ et Franciæ. Quibus non placebit conjectura hæc, meliorem suppedient; doceantque quis ex Galliæ regibus ante mortem Rattoldi abbatis qui ann. 986 obiit, potiore jure in regem Angliæ ungi et consecrari potuerit.” This would indeed be difficult: but it is not necessary that those who are dissatisfied with the conjectures of so very learned a person as Me-nard, are bound to propose better.

<sup>25</sup> “reportet. Virtutibus, Christe, hunc quibus præfatos fideles tuos decorasti, multiplici honoris benedictione condecora, et in regimine regni sublimiter colloca, et oleo gratiæ Spiritus Sancti perunge, per Dominum, in unitate ejusdem.” ibid. Immediately after this prayer in K. Ethelred’s Order, follows the anointing, of which the rubric, &c. is given below. It may be added that the French order of K. Charles V. (just spoken of) gives the concluding sentences of both the Anglo-Saxon and the Sarum orders: putting the Sarum last, and of course omitting the “Per Dominum” of the first.

Vivat inter gentium catervas magnanimus, sit in judiciis æquitatis singularis, locupletet eum tua prædives dextera, frugiferam obtineat patriam, et ejus liberis tribuas profutura; præsta ei prolixitatem vitæ per tempora, ut in diebus ejus oriatur justitia; a te robustum teneat regiminis solium, et cum jocunditate et justitia æterno glorietur in regno. Per Dominum.

Deus ineffabilis, auctor mundi, conditor generis humani, gubernator imperii, confirmator regni, qui ex utero fidelis amici tui patriarchæ nostræ Abrahæ præelegisti regem sæculis profuturum, tu præsentem regem hunc cum exercitu suo per intercessionem omnium sanctorum uberi benedictione locupleta, et in solium regni firma stabilitate connecte. Visita eum, sicut Moysen in rubo, Jesum Nave in prælio, Gedeon in agro, Samuelem in templo, et illa eum benedictione siderea ac sapientiæ tuæ rore perfunde, quam beatus David in psalterio Salomon filius ejus, te remunerante, percepit e cœlo. Sis ei contra acies inimicorum lorica, in adversis galea, in prosperis patientia, in protectione clypeus sempiternus; et præsta ut gentes illi teneant fidem, proceres sui habeant pacem, diligant caritatem, abstineant se a cupiditate, loquantur justitiam, custodiant veritatem; et ita populus iste pullulet, coalitus benedictione æternitatis, ut semper maneant tripudiantes in pace victores. Per Christum Dominum nostrum.

Tunc vero a metropolitano vel episcopo dissectis ansulis in apertura tunicæ et camisiæ supradictæ, pallio super dictur principem extenso, manus principis oleo inungantur, dicente metropolitano vel episcopo orationem ' Ungantur,' etc." This variation of rubric is introduced in a later hand into the margin of our text.

I would remind the student, that he must compare the many variations of the modern Roman pontifical: here I think it only necessary to quote a part of the rubric preceding the unction, according

Ungantur<sup>30</sup> manus istæ de oleo sanctificato, unde uncti fuerunt reges et prophetæ, et sicut unxit Samuel to that Use. "Post hæc —, — metropolitanus intingit pollicem dexteræ manus in oleum catechumenorum, et inungit in modum crucis, illius brachium dexterum, inter juncturam manus, et juncturam cubiti, atque inter scapulas."

* From the note just above, transcribed from the Liber Regalis, this vestment was the "camisia." The student should consult the glossary of Du Cange for the several meanings of this word; nearly all of which are to be referred to some ecclesiastical use, and most frequently it seems to have signified the albe. Thus he cites Alcuin, de div. Off., who says: "Tanica, linea vestis erat interior, quam camisiam dicimus, vel supparum." And Peter Blesensis: "Indutus camisia linea, quæ communi nomine dicitur Alba." Serm. 41. However, in the text, the "camisia" is to be taken to signify the under garment, or linen, of the sovereign: of which meaning there are many examples in old writers. As Isidore explains the word: "Camisias vocamus quod in his dormimus in camis, id est, in stratis nostris." Also, Paul the deacon: "Supparus, vestimentum puellarum, quod et subucula, id est, camisia dicitur." In Epit. Festi. And once more, Victor Uticensis: "De palliis altaris, pro nefas, camisias sibi et femoralia faciebant." De persec. Vandal. l. 1.

To these it cannot be amiss to add an example of this vestment, as a royal present to an English prince, in the early part of the seventh century, from pope Boniface: who thus concludes his epistle to K. Edwin. "Præterea, benedictionem protectoris vestri beati Petri apostolorum principis vobis direximus, id est, camisiam cum ornatura in auro una, et lena Ancyriana una: quod petimus, ut eo benignitatis animo gloria vestra suscipiat, quo a nobis noscitur destinatum." Beda Hist. Ecc. lib. 2. cap. xj.

"Hic unguatur oleo, et hæc cantetur antiphona: Unxerunt Salomonem Sadoch sacerdos et Nathan propheta regem in Gion:

unhappily imperfect: a folio having been torn out. See below, for the whole prayer, in Appendix No. 2. note 4, from the Leofric misseal.

The order in the later MSS. varies considerably, nor is it difficult to trace the alterations as they were introduced. The following is the Service as appointed for King Henry I. which, generally, is the same also in the Winchester pontifical and the Dublin MS. with the exception that these last have the prayer “ Prospice omnipotens Deus,” after the unction of the hands.

“ Tunc demum ab ipso metropolitano unguantur sibi manus de oleo sanctificato: Unguantur manus istæ, etc. (Oremus. Prospice, omnipotens. Winchester and Dublin MSS.) Postea vero pectus et scapulae, ambæque compages brachiorum ipsius unguantur de supradicto oleo, et de eodem cruas fiat super caput ejus, et postea de chrismate, et dicantur sequentes orationes Deus Dei filius Jesus. (Oremus Deus, qui es justorum gloria Hen. I.) Postea ab episcopiensem recipiat.”

In the Cotton MS. Tiberius B. viij. (which enables us to trace the prayer, “ Prospice omnipotens,” to the early part of the xjth century), and in the Bodl. MS. Rawl. C. 400, we have:

Deus tuus dedit tibi, ~~ad regendum~~ et gubernandum.
Quod ipse præstare dignetur, qui cum Patre.

manus istæ. etc. Oratio. Prospice, omnipotens Deus. Postea vero caput, pectus, et scapula, ambæque compages brachiorum ipsius unguantur a metropolitano, ita dicente: Unguatur caput istud, etc. Interim cantatur resp. Deum time. Post unctionem, oratio: Deus Dei filius Jesus. Alia. Deus, qui es justorum. Postea ab episcopis ense recipiat." I must remark, that the rubrics in the order of Edward II. vary in some verbal omissions from the above. For example, it says simply, "Oratio," not prefixing "Post unctionem."

The Cotton MS. Tiberius E. viij. is the same with MS. Tiberius, B. viij, except that it omits

the prayers "Prospice omnipotens," and "Deus, qui es justorum."

The order for K. Edward II. with some unimportant variations, follows that of the text, as far as the anointing of the head.

<sup>21</sup> The Sarum pontifical has "Respice," but, upon the authority of all the MSS. (the Exeter alone excepted) which have the prayer, viz. of Henry I. Edward II. and the Liber Regalis; of the Winchester pontifical; the Lansdown MS. 451; the Royal MS. 12. D. 3; and the Cotton, Tiberius B. viij; of the Bodl. MS. Rawl. c. 400, and the Dublin MS. I have introduced "Prospice" into the text.

"Et pręvideatur a sacrista quod ampullę tam de oleo quam de chrismate, quarum una deaurata est et in se continens sanctum chrisma, altera vero solum argentea et in se continens oleum sanc-reges et prophetæ, et sicut Samuel unxit David in regem ut sis benedictus, et constitutus rex in regno isto, super populum istum quem Dominus Deus tuus dedit tibi ad regendum et gubernandum. Quod ipse præstare dignetur.

Deus, Dei Filius, Jesus Christus, Dominus noster, qui a Patre oleo exultationis unctus est præ participibus suis, ipse per præsentem sacri unguenti infusionem Spiritus Paracliti super caput tuum infundat benedictionem, eandemque usque ad interiora cordis tui penetrare faciat, quatenus hoc visibili et tractabili dono invisibilia percipere, et temporali regno justis moderaminibus executo, æternaliter cum eo regnare merearis, qui solus sine peccato Rex regum vivit, et gloriatur cum Deo Patre, in unitate Spiritus Sancti, Deus, per omnia sæcula sæculorum. Amen.

Deus, qui es justorum gloria, et misericordia peccatorum, qui misisti Filium tuum pretioso sanguine suo genus humanum redimere, qui conteris bella, et propugnator es in te sperantium, et sub cuius arbitrio omnium regnorum continetur potestas, te humiliter deprecamur, ut præsentem famulum tuum .N. in tua misericordia confidentem, in præsentem sede regali be-

This variation is (as before) introduced into the margin of the Sarum pontifical.

The reader will observe that the benediction "Ungatur caput," etc. is omitted: nor is it in the order of K. Edward II. Hence it was doubtless introduced between the date of the Liber Regalis, and of the MS. from which our text is taken.

ne I dicas, eique propitius adesse digneris, ut qui tua expetit protectione defendi, omnibus sit hostibus fortior. Fac eum, Domine, beatum esse, et victorem de inimicis suis. Corona eum corona justitiæ et pietatis, ut ex toto corde et tota mente in te credens, tibi deserviat, sanctam tuam ecclesiam defendat et sublimet, populumque sibi commissum juste regat, nullis insidiantibus malis eum in injustitiam convertat. Accende, Domine, cor ejus ad amorem tuæ gratiæ per hoc unctionis oleum, unde unxisti sacerdotes, reges, et prophetas, quatenus diligens justitiam, per tramitem similiter justitiæ populum ducens, post peracta a te disposita in regali excellentia annorum curricula, pervenire ad æterna gaudia mereatur. Post hæc<sup>35</sup> vero induatur sindonis colobio,<sup>36</sup> capite

Hiis taliter peractis, a metropolitano vel episcopo benedicantur regalia ornamenta. 'Deus, rex regum.' etc." Lib. Regalis: and, in the margin of the Pontifical.

An ancient pontifical of the church of Sens, the order of which is the vijth of those printed by Martene, has this rubric: "sciendum quod ejus camisia, propter sanctam unctionem debet comburi." De ant. ecc. rit. tom. 2. p. 227.

 dies in albis ita existente; pedibus ejus sandalia coaptentur, et calcaria; postea induatur regalibus.*

Johan. de Janua, in Catholico: "Notum quod non solum virgines, sed etiam diaconi utebantur colobio, loco cujus postea usi sunt dalmatica." And that this was originally a female garment, appears from another old authority, who also gives us a different etymology: "Colobium, pallium virginale, ut quod ad talos descendens sine manicis, et dicitur colobium, quasi colubium, a collo dependens, vel quod sit longum." This seems quite as probable a derivation as the first: for if the colobium was short in one respect, it was long in another.

Macri says: "Hoc tunicæ genere induebantur Apostoli:" and his reason for this statement is short, if not satisfactory; "conservabatur enim in basilica apostolorum colobium D. Thomæ apostoli." Hierolexicon. Ferrarius argues (de re vestiaria, l. cap. 7), against all the authorities above, that the colobium had short sleeves, rather than none at all: but his only proof is a doubtful passage in Tertullian.

In the "Liber pontificalis," in the acts of S. Eutychian, we are told; "Qui et constituit, ut quicumque fidelium defunctum martyrem sepeliret, sine dalmatica aut colobio purpurato nulla ratione sepeliret." Tom. 1. p. 65. Edit. Vignoll. The editor explains in a note: "Hic vero purpuratum esse oportere dicitur, ut scilicet martyres cum eo sepultos pro Christo sanguinem fudisse, indicio id esset."

<sup>7</sup> The amice was an ecclesiastical vestment, worn only by the clergy who were in sacred orders. Hence the use of it in the present case is important, in its bearing upon the mixed character which attached to an anointed sovereign. For its ancient purpose, it was a covering for the head; a square piece of linen, embroidered (or apparelled as it was technically termed) upon one edge. In the rubric in the text, it is directed to be applied, as originally intended. But at that time by the clergy of England, as now by the clergy of the church of Rome, the amice was only placed for an instant upon the top of the head, and then lowered upon the shoulders, to be left there, and adjusted round the neck. So that the use of it became merely symbolical.

Not that this was an alteration of late date: because Amalarius says, (and explains its meaning,) "Amictus est primum vestimentum nostrum, quo collum undique

But he will obtain much more solid information from Bona, Rer. Lit. lib. 1. cap. 24. with Sala's notes on the place: Saussajus, Panopl.

Without specifying all the variations, of which the chief is the omission of the antiphon, "Confortare," it will be sufficient to state here, that from hence, to the benediction "Sta et retine," with which the earlier Forms conclude, all the other MSS. follow the order and prayers of the text: except that one of them only, viz. that of K. Edward II., gives the benediction of the ring, and that

<sup>41</sup> There is certainly some difficulty about the " armillæ : " not as regards the shape, and purpose, and mode of being put on, for all these points are cleared by the rubric presently cited from the Liber Regalis; but with respect to the name. There can be little doubt that the " armilla " was originally a bracelet; as Ducange explains the word in his glossary, citing Strabo, lib. 4. and Polybius, lib. 2. The same learned writer adds: " Has denique armillas, quas et Baugas vocabant, ut præcipua regiæ dignitatis ornamenta habuisse Francos nostros, pluribus de cuimus ad Alexiadem pag. 261 quod etiam de Danis ac Angli testatur Simeon Dunelm. lib. 2 cap. 13. et Thom. Walsingham p. 196."

A late writer, Mr. Taylor, has observed, (on the correctness of which I cannot venture an opinion,) " the word baugas identifies the ' armillæ ' here spoken of with the Islandic baugr, and armbaugr the beax and earum-beax of the Anglo-Saxons; — their bracelet or arm-ring." Glory of regality, p. 84.

But I do not think the difficulty above spoken of, is so great as some would make it: who argue that anciently the stole and the armil were two different things, put on separately: first the stole, then the armil or bracelet. I do not see that there is any reasonable ground to suppose this: but rather, that the armil was always made in the shape of a stole, and answered the purpose of it. It was called armil, because after being put about the neck, it was tied to the arms. Mr. Taylor, above mentioned, appeals to Thomas

Accipe armillas sinceritatis et sapientiæ, divinæque circumdationis indicium, quibus intelligas omnes operationes tuas contra hostes visibiles et invisibiles posse esse munitas : per Dominum.<sup>42</sup>

Walsingham, as "a triumphant authority" to prove that the two were, anciently, different things: but the place he refers to is by no means so clear to that effect: for the historian says, that first the stole was put on, then that the archbishop delivered the armillæ. "Projecta circa collum ejus stola, — tunc duo comites eum gladio accinxerunt, quo facto, archiepiscopus armillas dedit ei, dicens: Accipe armillas, etc." Hist. Angl. p. 196. This may well be understood to signify that these armillæ were first laid upon the shoulders of the king "in modum stolæ:" and when about to be tied to the arms, the archbishop repeated the prescribed form. Nor would there be any obscurity in Walsingham's account, if he had not inserted the account of the sword. The two ends however of the armillæ might during that time have been pendant, and untied. But in short: all this argument rests upon the supposition that Walsingham is correct in every detail: he might have been so: but whether or not, it is impossible that he can be so interpreted as to be made to say, that the armillæ and the stole were two different things: for the actual Form and Order of that coronation which he describes is the Liber Regalis, from which I have transcribed in the following note a rubric, which settles the dispute.

This is a long note, yet I would add the following from "the Little Devise of the coronacion of Henrie VII." "And it is to wit that armyll is made in manner of a stole woven with golde and set with stones, to be put by the cardinall about the king's neck, and comyng from bothe shulders to his bothe elbowes, where thei shall be fastenid by the abbot of Westminster, with lace of silke to euerie side the elbowe in two places; that is to say, aboue the elbowes and beneth." Ives' select papers, p. 110.

"Istæ quidem armillæ, in modum stolæ, circa collum et ab utraque scapula usque ad compages brachiorum erunt dependentes, in ipsis brachiorum compagibus laqueis sericis connexæ, prout plenius per ipsarum poterit discerni compositionem. The open pall, as worn by K.
 James II. is figured in Sandford’s account of that coronation : he calls it also the Dalmatic : by which we may suppose that the “ robe royal ” of modern days, or Dalmatic, is the ancient pall. But they were properly distinct vestments, and of different shapes.
 The Dalmatic, was a super-tunic, proper to deacons ; and originally restricted to bishops. The first mention of it as an ecclesiastical garment is in the life of S. Cyprian, by his deacon : who, describing his martyrdom, says :

" — minutatim ſuper coronam, atque a metropolitano vel epiſcopo incenſetur: etc." Lib. Regalis. The rubric is the ſame in the order of K. Edward II.

" This and the ſucceeding prayer are of very high antiquity, in this place: occurring after the rubric "Hic coronetur rex, eiſque dicatur:" (ſee Note 39,) in the Anglo-Saxon order of K. Ethelred. Between the two prayers in that manuſcript is this rubric, "Oratio ſuper regem, poſtquam corona fuerit impoſita ſuper caput ejus. Deus perpetuitatis. etc."

Deus, cœlestium terrestriumque conditor creatorum, atque humani generis benignissime reparator spiritualis gratiæ, omniumque benedictionum largitor, qui justitiam tuæ legis in cordibus credentium digito tuo, id est, Unigenito tuo scribis, cui magi in Egypto resistere non valentes concinebant, dicentes digitus Dei est hic, immitte Spiritum Sanctum Paraclitum tuum de cœlis super hunc annulum arte fabril decoratum, et sublimitatis tuæ potentia ita eum emundare digneris, ut omni nequitia lividi venenosique serpentis procul expulsa, metallum a te bono Conditorum creatum immune a cunctis sordibus inimici maneat. Per Christum.

Benedic, Domine, et sanctifica annulum istum, et mitte super eum septiformem Spiritum tuum, quo famulus tuus eo fruens, annulo fidei subarratus, virtute Altissimi sine peccato custodiatur, et omnes benedictiones quæ in scripturis divinis reperiuntur super eum copiose descendant, ut quæcumque sanctificaverit sanctificata permaneant, et quæcumque benedixerit spirituali benedictione benedicantur: Per Dominum: in unitate ejusdem.

Accipe regiæ dignitatis annulum, et per hunc in te catholicæ fidei signaculum, quatenus ut hodie ornaris caput et princeps regni ac populi, ita perseveres auctor ac stabilitor Christianitatis et Christianæ fidei; ut felix in opere, locuples in fide, cum Rege regum glorieris, cui est honor et gloria per æterna sæculorum sæcula. Amen.

Deus, cujus est omnis potestas et dignitas, da famulo tuo suæ propriæ dignitatis effectum, in qua, te remune-

rante, permaneat, semperque te timeat, tibi que jugiter placere contendat. Per Dominum.

Accipe sceptrum regiae potestatis insigne, virgam scilicet regni rectam, virgam virtutis, qua te ipsum bene regas, sanctam ecclesiam populumque videlicet Christianum, tibi a Deo commissum, regia virtute ab improbis defendas, pravos corrigas, rectos pacifices, et ut viam rectam tenere possint tuo juvamine dirigas, quatenus de temporali regno ad aeternum regnum pervenias, ipso adjuvante cujus regnum permanet in saecula saeculorum. Amen.

In the order of K. Ethelred, the rubric immediately succeeding the prayer (see Note 45.) "Deus perpetuitatis" is, "Hic detur regi sceptrum, eique dicitur: 'Accipe sceptrum' etc." The reader will observe that all this part of the Office can be traced in the same order, up to the Anglo-Saxon age.

VOL. III.

<sup>47</sup> There cannot be a better distinction laid down between the two sceptres, the "sceptrum" and the "virga," than that in the rubric from the Liber Regalis in the note above, compared with the succeeding one from the same book, in note 49. Namely, that the one was surmounted by a cross, the other by a dove. And Hoveden, in his account of the coronation of Richard I., gives the same explanation. We learn from the Ethelred order, that there was a distinction in the Saxon age, between the two sceptres: and I do not see any reason to suppose, but that it was of the same kind then, as in after years.

There is sufficient evidence in history, that the caution in this rubric, as to the throng of people, was not uncalled for: thus,

Walsingham tells us, in his account of the coronation of Edward II., “Fuit autem ibi tanta compressio populi, ut quidam miles Johannes de Blackwel, sine viatico expiraret.” Hist. Angl. p. 96. And again, incidentally, as to the coronation itself of King Richard II., “Adveniente die præfixo, conveniunt de cunctis regni partibus in tanta quidem copia, ut numerus Londoniæ confluentium multitudinem eorum, qui ad regis coronationem paucis annis ante confluxerant excessive (multorum testimonio) superaret.” p. 237. successione tenuisti hæreditario iudicio, tibi delegatum per auctoritatem Dei omnipotentis, et præsentem traditionem nostram et omnium episcoporum cæterorumque Dei servorum: et quanto clerum sacris altaribus propinquiorem perspicias, tanto ei potiozem in locis congruis honorem impendere memineris; quatenus mediator Dei et hominum,<sup>53</sup> te mediatorem cleri et plebis in hoc regni solio confirmet, et in regnum æternum regnare faciat, Jesus Christus, Dominus Noster, Rex regum, et Dominus dominantium: Qui cum Patre et Spiritu Sancto, vivit et regnat in sæcula sæculorum. Amen.<sup>54</sup>

<sup>53</sup> Catalani has some observations, strange enough, as if the attributing the Mediatorial office to our Blessed Saviour required explanation. Rather, whenever the term "mediators" is applied to the clergy of the Church of Christ, it requires an explanation; and that we should remember the just and proper sense, in which it was used by the older Fathers: not as suggesting any interference with the incommunicable prerogative of our Blessed Lord, by which He is the alone and sole Mediator between God and man, but as referring simply to an infinitely lower degree of mediatorship, which is ministerial only, and nothing more. It is in this sense that the authors of the Apostolical Constitutions wrote, when they thus addressed the Bishops of that primitive age:—

προφηταί—ὅι μείσται Θεοῦ καὶ τῶν πιστῶν αὐτοῦ." Lib. 2. Cap. xxv. And the very learned editor, Cotelerius, refers to many similar passages in the Fathers, summing up the whole with this remark: "Solus Christus, aiunt theologi, mediator est naturæ ac redemptionis; sacerdotes autem mediatores sunt ministerii et intercessionis." So also S. Basil interpreted the text of S. Paul to the Galatians, not explaining away the real mediatorship (in its limited sense) of Moses, where he writes; "Τὸν γὰρ μείστην Θεοῦ καὶ ἀνθρώπων δι' ἑαυτοῦ τότε προαπετυκον ἐν τῇ του νομοῦ διακονίᾳ. Οὐ γὰρ του Πνεύματος τυκος ἦν Μωυσης, τα προς του Θεοῦ τῷ λαῷ μείστεινων." De Spiritu Sancto. Cap. xiv. 33.

<sup>54</sup> The reader will remember, see Note 39, that with this "designatio status," as it is termed in

K. Ethelred's order, the earlier Forms conclude. And in fact the two succeeding prayers would seem to belong properly to the mass which follows, and where they are ordered in the Pontifical to be said, as the student will observe. Hence they are not placed here in the order of Edward II., nor in the Liber Regalis, nor in the MS. in the King's Library. (Brit. Mus.) 12. D. iij. In the Evesham pontifical, however, (Lansdown MS. 451) we find them placed as in the text. But what is very remarkable, they are appointed to be said here, in the very ancient Anglo-Saxon order of K. Ethelred, with which that Form concludes. Thus:

“Sequitur oratio. Omnipotens Deus det tibi, etc.

“Alia oratio. Benedic, Domine, fortitudinem, etc.

Finit consecratio regis.” Then follows the Order for a Queen: and the proper mass. In my remark above, that these two prayers would seem to belong more properly to the mass, I am borne out by a marginal note in the Pontifical, in a somewhat later hand: viz.: “Istæ duæ orationes sequentes debent dici super regem infra missam, postquam oblationem fecerit.” But the reader will not fail to perceive that the text, below, of the Pontifical itself leaves it doubtful: merely saying, “vel dicantur loco quo intitulantur, secundum quosdam.”

Benedictio illius qui apparuit in rubo veniat super caput istius, et plena sit benedictio Domini in filiis ejus, et tingat in oleo pedem suum. <sup>55</sup> The Liber Regalis and the margin of the Pontifical add:

<sup>56</sup> There is scarcely an instance upon record, from the time that the coronation of our sovereigns became an office especially to be fulfilled by the Church, that the celebration of the Holy Communion did not also form part of it.

Either before, or after, or mixed up with the rites and ceremonies of the solemnity itself. Nor has it been otherwise with other Christian nations. Thus Baronius (ad annum 816) speaks of the coronation of Louis the Pious and his queen. “Postea pontifex honoravit eum magnis honoribus, et multis, et reginam Irmingardam, et omnes optimates, et ministros ejus: et in proxima dominica, ante missarum solemniam, coram clero, et omni populo, consecravit eum, et unxit ad imperatorem, etc.” Again, the same historian, describing a coronation by Pope

Stephen II. in the preceding century, says: "Inter celebrationem consecrationis altaris, et oblationem sacratissimi sacrificii, unxit in reges Francorum florentissimum regem [Pipinum] et duos filios ejus, Carolum et Carlomanum." Ad annum 714. The reader will also see, by reference to the Appendix to this office, No. 2, that in the vijth century, according to the pontifical of archbishop Egbert, it was the custom to mix up the solemnities of the coronation with the Eucharistic Service.

<sup>57</sup> The "Missa pro rege ordinato," in K. Ethelred's Office, commences with this collect, the same, except the variation noticed just below. This mass gives a proper collect, secret, preface, and benediction: there was a post-communion also, or "ad complendum," but the MS. ends, imperfect, with those words.

Being too long to be written, as usual, on the margin of the Sacrum Pontifical, an extra folio has been inserted, upon which it is written, not in red, but in black: with marginal notes, which are introduced also below.

“Deinde magnus camerarius Angliæ exuet regem regalibus antedictis, quæ per dictum camerarium singillatim, sicut a rege auferuntur, tradentur abbati Westmonasteriensi, vel vicem ejus agentis, ut sæpius præscriptum est, explained by Ducange. "Qui vinum convivis miscet. Catholicon parvum, Pincerna, Bouteiller. Joan de Janua. Pincerna dicitur vini dispensator, vel potius propinator, qui porrigit ex officio poculum domino suo."

The word "simila" also occurs, which is thus explained by Ducange. "Simila, ut simenellus, panis ex simila, vel etiam placentulæ species, quæ alibi foliata dicitur." "Panis similaceus, ex Simila, Græcis σεμιδαλτης, cui secundum inter panes bonitatis locum assignat Galenus lib. 1. de aliment. Anglis simnelbread. Inde regiis mensis ministrari olim solitus. Liber de situ ecclesiæ Belli in Angliâ. Constituens in primo monachis ejusdem ecclesiæ ad cotidianos usus panem regiæ mensæ aptum, qui Simenel vulgo vocatur. Bromptonus ann. 1044. "Eo die præcentor loci recipiat de fisco regio dimidiam marcam, et conventus centum simenellos, et unum modium vini." Glossarium in verb.

Spelman in his glossary says that the simnels were made of the best, and not of any inferior wheat: "Panis purior, sic dictus, quod a simila, hoc est, puriori farinæ parte efficitur." This certainly would have been a reason why the simnels should be especially given to the monks of Westminster, on the festival of a coronation. At any rate it is to be hoped that, whatever they were made of, they were more tempting to look at, (of the taste I cannot speak) than simnels of the present day, which are really offensive in their appearance;* and cannot but be, as another old writer, Constantinus Africanus, has described them, "very indigestible," although possibly "very nutritious." We must commiserate the daily fare of the convent of Westminster, when simnels, such as these, were an extraordinary treat.

* The town of Devizes, in Wiltshire, has long been famous for these "simnels:" and at present, I am told, they are made of

Officium Coronationis Reginae.

IE quo regina<sup>a</sup> sola coronanda est, conveniant in palatio regali apud Westmonasterium praelati et nobiles regni, et ordinetur processio per archiepiscopos, episcopos, et praelatos, abbatem et conventum Westm. in capis sericis, et aliis, quia processus requirunt honorificentiam: et sic indui

<sup>a</sup> The Pontificals differ in the first rubric of this office: the earlier books are very short in their directions; and some refer to an "Ordo Romanus," not now followed by the pontifical of the Church of Rome, for the benediction "ad introitum," or, "ad ostium ecclesiae." Thus the imperfect Salisbury pontifical in the Bodleian, the Cotton MS. Tiberius E. viij, and B. viij, (of the xijth century), commence: "Benedictio reginae dicenda in ingressu ecclesiae secundum ordinem Romanum: Omnipotens sempiternus Deus, fons, etc." It may be as well to give here, in brief, the full order as it continues in those MSS.

"Post hanc sequitur benedictio dicenda ante altare: Deus, qui solus habes." (Here the Bodleian MS. is imperfect.) "Item post hanc in sacri olei unctione sequitur hæc oratio: Spiritus Sancti gratia humilitatis. Hic unguatur oleo sancto: In nomine Patris et Filii. Hic detur annulus. Accipe annulum. Sequitur oratio. Deus cujus est. Benedictio coronæ. Deus tuorum corona. Item in eodem ordine, ad coronæ impositionem. Postquam benedicta fuerit, coronabitur. Accipe coronam." The MS. Tib. B. viij. alone adds: "Alia. Officio indignitatis nostræ. Oratio. Omnium Domine fons bonorum."

<sup>a</sup> To these may be added, the Evesham Pontifical, before cited: which has the same rubric: but the authority of that MS. (an abbatial pontifical, it must be remembered) is very much lessened by its constant mixture of, and reference to, in many offices, other Uses: not only the Roman, but the Gallican.

www.libtool.com.cn

In the Order of K. Edwd. II. we find this benediction, but, as in the text, no reference is made to the "Ordo Romanus." It seems now to have become a settled part of the English Office, and not requiring any longer an external authority. "Ad benedictionem sive consecrationem reginae, dicitur ab episcopo ad ingressum ecclesiae oratio. Omnipotens sempiternus Deus, fons etc." This Order generally corresponds, except in the shortness of its rubrics, with the text: and I shall mark the chief variations as we proceed.

In the Order of K. Henry I., with which, generally, agrees the Winchester pontifical, this benediction is omitted altogether: whence we may conclude that it was introduced very shortly after his time: the earliest MS. in which I have seen it, being that cited above, Tiberius B. viij. It will be well, in this case as before, to give at once the whole arrangement at this date. A.D. 1100.

"Benedictio reginae quae ab episcopo in ecclesia, coram optimatibus, ante altare facienda est. Oratio. Deus qui solus habet. Hic effundatur oleum sanctum super verticem ejus in modum crucis, dicente episcopo: In nomine Patris. etc. Sequatur oratio. Omnipotens sempiternus Deus, affluentem. Hic detur annulus, dicente episcopo: Accipe annulum. Sequatur oratio. Deus cuius est omnis. Benedictio coronae regiae. Deus tuorum corona. Hic coronetur. Accipe coronam. Sequatur oratio. Omnium, Domine, fons bonorum."

Lastly, we have the very valuable and important order of K. Ethelred, which has a rubric at the beginning of somewhat greater length, and of no little interest.

"Finit consecratio regis." See above, Note 54. "Quam sequitur consecratio reginae, quae propter honorificentiam ab episcopo sacri unguinis oleo super verticem perfundenda est, et in ecclesia coram optimatibus cum condigno honore et regia celsitudine, in regalis thori consortium, benedicenda et consecranda est; quae etiam annulo pro integritate fidei, et corona pro aeternitatis gloria decoranda est.

Quæ quidem regina induta erit tunica, et cyclade<sup>68</sup> cum fimbria longa et defluenti; quæ quidem tunica et cyclas unius erunt coloris, videlicet purpurei, et unius texturæ, sine opere aliquo alio artificiali desuper intertexto. capite nudato, laxatos circa humeros decenter habens crines, gestabit circulum aureum gemmis ornatum, ut honestius crines capiti ejus constringantur.

Hanc sic ornatam præcedet rex regalibus suis indutus, si præsens esse placuerit, tunc subsequenter duo magnates, quorum primus præcedens portabit sceptrum reginæ. Alius vero reginæ portabit coronam, quos subsequetur regina, quam reverenter hinc inde sustentabunt duo episcopi ad hoc per regem assignati: et ibi erunt barones quinque portuum,<sup>69</sup> qui pannum sericum quadratum ac purpureum, qui alias umbraculum nomi-

The same writer says, "the claim of the cinque-ports is founded on a prescriptive right, recognized by the charter of King Charles II., in which 'consider'

The barons are said to have carried the "umbraculum" at the coronation of K. Richard I.: Matthew Paris speaks of them at the coronation of Henry III.—"Custodibus vero quinque portuum, pallam super regem cum quatuor hastis supportantibus; quod tamen tunc scrupulo contentionis penitus non carebat." Hist. Angl. p. 355. Whence we may conclude that they then proved their right. I shall only quote further from Holinshed's Chronicle, in the account of the coronation of Henry VIII. and Katherine of Arragon: "this noble prince with his queene at time convenient, under their canopies borne by the barons of the five ports, went from the said palace to Westminster Abbaie upon cloth, called vulgarly cloth of raie; the which cloth was cut and spoiled by the rude and common people, immediately after their repaire into the abbaie." Vol. 3. p. 801.

Henry de Knyghton states, that the privileges of the cinque-ports were first granted to them by K. John, on condition of their providing at all times, upon reasonable notice, ships for him to pass over into Normandy, or elsewhere: "Causa cujus dotationis adhuc clamant liberiores esse præ cæteris portibus omnibus regni Angliæ." Chronica. Hist. Angl. Script. Tom. 2. col. 2424.

Hiis sic ordinatis et dispositis, regem et reginam processionaliter in ecclesiam ducant: ad cujus ecclesiae introitum, ab archiepiscopo vel episcopo reginam coronaturo, dicetur super eandem reginam haec oratio:

This, in short, was the "cloth of raie" of Holinshed, in the place cited in the preceding note.

<sup>12</sup> " Oratione hac finita, procedent rex et regina, ut primitus incedebant, processionaliter per medium chori, usque in pulpitem quo cum ascenderint residebit rex, regalibus amictus, in sede regali sibi præparata. Regina vero procedet ad gradus magni altaris. etc." Lib. Regalis. As it has been observed in the preliminary dissertation, this MS. supposes, throughout the Office, the presence of the king.

" Oratione completa, procedant rex et regina per ecclesiam modo quo supra dictum est, usque ad pulpitem et ad solia eis præparata, ac rege pro sua sancta unctione et coronatione usque ad altare descendente, præfata regina dictis proceribus cum sceptro, virga, et corona ipsam præcedentibus, præfatis episcopis illam, ut prædictum est, hinc inde sustentantibus, usque ad dictum altare regem subsequetur. Cui faldistorium a parte sinistra dicti altaris erit præparatum, in quo ipsa residebit dum de legibus et regni consuetudinibus et aliis, ut supra dictum est, per metropolitanum sive episcopum dictos regem et reginam consecraturum fuerit requisitum: dictis requisitionibus actis, sacramentoque, ut supra dictum est, super altare præstito, regina genuflectet, pro rege domino suo et pro seipsa humiles Deo fundens preces, incipiente metropolitano, vel episcopo, hymnum: 'Veni Creator Spiritus,' cum nota. Rege itaque inuncto et coronato, atque coronationis suæ solemnibus celebratis modo et forma quibus prædictum est, in solio suo residente, regina procedat ad gradus magni altaris, et prosternet se super tapetum et quissinos prius per regios ministros, modo quo prædictum est, et honeste, præparatos: super quam ita solo prostratam dicetur a metropolitano sive episcopo ipsam consecraturum orationem sequentem. Ps. Veni Creator Spiritus.

Deus, qui solus habes immortalitatem, lucemque inhabitas inaccessibilem, cujus providentia in sui dispositione non fallitur, qui fecisti quæ futura sunt, et vocas ea quæ non sunt tanquam ea quæ sunt, qui superbos æquo moderamine de principatu dejicis, atque humiles dignanter in sublime provehis, ineffabilem misericordiam tuam supplices exoramus, ut sicut reginam Hester, causa Judaicæ salutis, de captivitatis suæ compede solutam, ad regis Assueri thalamum regni-que sui consortium transire fecisti, ita hanc famulam tuam .N. humilitatis nostræ benedictione, Christianæ plebis gratia salutis, ad dignam sublimemque regis nostri copulam misericorditer transire concedas, ut in regalis fœdere conjugii semper manens pudica, proximam virginitati palmam continere queat, tibi-que, Deo vivo et vero, in omnibus et super omnia jugiter placere desideret, et, te inspirante, quæ tibi placita sunt toto corde perficiat: per Dominum.

In nomine Patris ✠, et Filii ✠, et Spiritus ✠ Sancti, prosit tibi hæc unctio olei in honorem et confirmationem æternam, in sæcula sæculorum. Amen.

Omnipotens sempiterne Deus, affluentem spiritum tuæ bene ✠ dictionis, super famulam tuam, nobis orantibus, propitiatus infunde, ut quæ per manus nostræ impositionem hodie regina instituitur, sanctificatione tua digna et electa permaneat, ut nunquam postmodum de tua gratia separetur indigna. Per.

semper adhærebit, post dictam unctionem recludi : deinde detur ei annulus a consecrante, dicente sic, si prius fuerit benedictus : sin autem, benedicatur modo subscripto sic :

<sup>1</sup> This first appendix is the first rubric of the "Liber Regalis." In the library of the Dean and Canons of Westminster there is a noble manuscript missal, probably the most beautiful copy, of English Use, now extant, of a large size, and richly illuminated; and which was given to the church there, by Abbot Littleton, about the year 1370. This contains several royal services; among them that of the coronation: in almost every respect it agrees with the "Liber regalis," and especially in having this long rubric at the commencement. But it has not the title "Officia, etc." beginning simply with the usual formula "Hic est ordo secundum quem. etc."

The Lansdown MS. 278, is a modern and apparently a correct transcript of the "Liber Regalis:" written in the 17th century.

posuit super caput ejus." An Henry of Germany was crowned in the year 1014, upon the same day.

There are very early examples also of coronations upon festivals. Charlemagne was crowned upon Christmas-day, A. D. 801: and, as Hoveden tells us, King Stephen of England was crowned upon St. Stephen's day, and, not to name others, Henry I. upon the feast of Memoratus vero princeps nocte præcedente coronationis suæ diem vacabit contemplationi divinæ et orationi intimæ,<sup>3</sup> considerans ad quem apicem sit vocatus qualiter is per quem reges regnant, ad populi sui ac plebis christianæ gubernationem, ipsum specialius præelegit. Et cogitet illud sapientis: ‘Principem te constituerunt noli extolli, sed esto in illis quasi unus ex illis.’ Et cogitet dignitatem regalem sibi a Deo præstitam, tanquam homini mortali, et ipsum idcirco ad tantam sublimitatem vocatum a Deo, ut ecclesiæ catholicæ sit defensor, fidei Christianæ dilatator, ac regni sui, et patriæ sibi a Deo commissæ, secundum vires protector. In oratione autem Salamonis imitetur prudentiam, cui in sui regno primordio pro cultu Creatoris ab ipso Creatore præceptum est, ut ea peteret quæ sibi vellet conferri. Qui non aurum, non argentum, neque divitias, nec de inimicis victoriam, ut homo juvenis, sibi dari deprecatus est. Sed magis ea postulavit quæ et Deus gratis præberet, et utiliter homo perciperet. ‘Redde mihi,’ inquit, ‘Domine, mentem sanam et prudentiam bonam, ut circa populum justum possim verumque proferre iudicium.’ Deprecetur igitur princeps

detur, ut rex ad sui inaugurationem, non modo per religiosa jejunia se præparet, sed etiam per alia pia opera. Unde ex MS. pontificali insignis ecclesiæ Senonensis, debet rex sabbato præcedente diem Dominicam, in qua est consecrandus, intempestæ noctis silentio venire in ecclesiam orationem facturum, et ibidem in oratione aliquantulum, si voluerit, vigilaturus.” Comment. in Pontif. tom. 1. p. 372.

ut divinitatis providentia, quæ ipsum ad tanti regimen ordinavit imperii, sibi largiri dignetur justitiam, pietatem, et prudentiam. Justitiam circa subjectos, pietatem circa Deum, et prudentiam circa regni gubernationem, quatenus nullo favore mollitus, nullis inimicitiis commotus, nulla concupiscentia illectus, nullaque alia passione constrictus, in semitis harum virtutum inoffenso pede valeat pertransire.

Hiis sub universorum concordia peractis, provideatur quod in aula regia majori sedes eminens sit, pannis sericis et inauratis decenter ornata, super quem dictus rex regnaturus cum omni mansuetudine et reverentia elevetur, ipso tamen prius ut moris est balneato et induto mundissimis vestibus, et caligis tantummodo calciato.<sup>5</sup>

Hoc modis omnibus observato, quod sicut in principe per actualem lotionem et vestimentorum decorem corpus nitescit, sic per veram et præviam confessionem ac compunctionis dolorem anima ipsa splendescat.

Hiis debite peractis, ordinetur in ecclesia per archiepiscopos, episcopos, abbatem, et conventum Westm. processio in capis sericis, cum textibus,<sup>6</sup> et thuribulis, et aliis quæ processioni conveniunt; et sic induti processio

<sup>5</sup> Hence we learn the proper meaning of the term "barefooted" in the old chronicles, when applied to this royal procession; which has been much mistaken by various writers. Thus, for example, in a modern popular, and rather superficial book, Knight's London, we are told of Richard the Third's coronation, that "perhaps the most striking feature of the event, is Richard's exhibition of humility, —he actually walked barefoot into the Abbey." Vol. 4. p. 91. No authority is given for this statement, but it is to be traced to Grafton: who says, "from thence the king and the queene goyng vpon rays cloth barefooted, etc."

Vol. 2. p. 115. But the meaning both of Grafton and of the rubric in the text is, that the king was not to wear sandals, or soles, but buskins only. Prynne, in his Signal Loyalty, has printed a "Forma coronationis regum et reginarum Angliæ," said to have been extracted from the Liber Regalis, but whether by himself or not, does not appear: it certainly differs from it. However, one sentence explains the meaning of "barefoot." "Item dicto die princeps coronandus—tantummodo caligis sine sotularibus calciatur." p. 242.

Quod quidem pulpitem una cum gradibus, ex utraque parte ejusdem existentibus, tapetis<sup>9</sup> per regios ministros ad hoc praeparatis sterni debet per totum

"The way from thense [the Hall] to the pulpytt in Westminster chirche arrayed vnder foote with raye cloth by the king's grete Awmoner of England, to be had of the king's grete Warderobe." Devyse for Hen. VIII.

<sup>9</sup> The Lansdown MS. 285, contains "The maner and forme of the kyngis and quenes coronacion in Englonde." I shall have occasion to cite this again, and shall refer to it, as before, by its number in the catalogue. Upon "the pulpitem" it directs:

"Also in Westminster chirche must be ordeynde a pulpit with grees on euery side. And that must be faire araide with clothes of silke, of golde, and aboute on the grounde both. The Kynges Trone. Also in that pulpit shall be a Roiall trone. And a Roiall see in the which the kyng shall sit. And it shall also bee roially

In circuitu vero summitatis pulpiti dependentur panni serici et inaurati. Thronus vero in quo rex ipse residere debet, de quo præactum est, palliis sericis ac pretiosissimis predicti regis camerarios<sup>10</sup> per totum erit coopertus, quissinis etiam per nominatos cameraarios in præfato throno repositis.

Pars autem panni illius virgulati, sive burelli, quæ per dictum eleemosynarium, ut præfatum est, sub pedibus regis incedentis extenditur, infra ecclesiam cedet semper in usus sacristæ loci, et reliqua pars tota quæ est extra ecclesiam distribuetur pauperibus per manus eleemosynarii supradicti.

Regem igitur coronandum, dictis prælatis ac monachis præcedentibus, episcopus Dunelm. videlicet et Bathon. ex antiqua consuetudine, si præsentés affuerint, dictam regem hinc inde sustentabunt. Cancellarius vero, si fuerit episcopus,<sup>11</sup> tum calice lapideo araide with quysshyns, and clothes of gold and silke."

The "Devyse" for K. Henry VIII. states: "The pulpit is to be couered with rede worsted. In the middes wherin must be two sieges royall" [for himself and queen Katherine] "with cloth of golde and quysshyns of the same. Save it is to wite, that the king's siege shall be made a good deal higher than the quenes, whiche shall be on the lyfte hande of the kyngis, and lower than it."

A very ancient, if not contemporary, English account of the coronation of Henry VI. also speaks of the pulpit to be covered in the same way, with red cloth.

"And than he was leyde upon the high scaffold; and that was couered all with red say, betwen the high antere and the quere." MS. Cotton. Nero. C. ix. fol. 172.

<sup>11</sup> The order respecting this, in the "Devyse" for Henry VIII., furnishes a curious specimen of confusion of language. "Next before the king the bishop chaunceler of England, then being William Warham bishop of Canterbury, yf he be a bishop, shall bere the chales. And in case he be noo bisshop, some other bisshop

This would indeed be puzzling, if we had not the exposition of our text: which is borne out by the following:

I must refer the reader to my work on the "Ancient Liturgy," p. 59, Note 73 (2nd edit.) From the reference in the text above, it would seem that, at least in the church of Westminster, the custom of the subdeacon to receive and hold the paten, was then observed in England.

Among the ornaments and furniture given by Abbot Godfrey to his church at Peterborough, A. D.

Et similiter ab eisdem baronibus portabitur pannus de serico, ultra reginam post regem incedentem, si ipsa die debeat coronari. Lectio libri Levitici.

extend over a period of more than eleven hundred years. By means of the present appendix, giving the earliest and the latest Forms, he will be able to discover the changes which took place previous to the coronation of Ethelred; he will observe that even after that time, according to the Use of some Churches in England, the new form had not been adopted, or, to speak perhaps more correctly, had not been authorised or approved; and he will trace its gradual approach to the finished Order of the Liber Regalis, through the intermediate stages of its growth in the respective ages of the Winchester and Exeter pontificals.

"In diebus ejus oriatur omnibus æquitas et justitia, amicis adjutorum, inimicis obstaculum, humi-

libus solatium, elevatis correptio, divitibus doctrina, pauperibus pietas, peregrinis auxilium, propriis in patria pax et securitas, unicuique secundum mensuram suam moderate gubernans se ipsum sedulus discat, ut tua irrigatus compunctione toti populo tibi placita præbere vitæ possit exempla, et per viam veritatis cum grege sibi subdito gradiens, opes fragiles abundanter acquirat, simul et salutem non solum corporum sed etiam cordium a te concessam cunctis accipiat. Sicque vitæ[?] cogitatum animi consiliumque omne componens, plebis gubernacula cum pace simul et sapientia semper invenire videatur, teque auxiliante præsentis vitæ prolixitatem perci-piat, et por tempora bona usque ad summam senectutem perveniat, hujusque fragilitatis finem perfectus, ab omnibus vitiorum vinculis tuæ pietatis largitate liberatus, et infinitæ prosperitatis præmia perpetua, angelorumque æterna commercia consequatur. Per.”

This prayer occurs also in the “Benedictional” or, as it should rather have been called, “Pontifical” of Archbishop Robert of Canterbury; and of which an account is given in the Archæologia, vol. 24. p. 118. This MS. is preserved in the public library at Rouen.

<sup>4</sup> The Leofric MS. omits this rubric, and proceeds at once to the prayer “Deus electorum:” with the title, “Alia.” I again transcribe this prayer from that manuscript. It has been already stated that it occurs in the Form of King Ethelred, but in a part of that MS. unhappily imperfect.

“Deus electorum fortitudo et humilium celsitudo, qui in primordio per effusionem diluvii crimina mundi castigare, et per columbarum ramum olivæ portantem pacem terris redditam demonstrasti, iterumque Aaron famulum tuum per unctionem olei sacerdotem sanxisti, et postea per hujus unguenti infusionem ad regendum populum Israeliticum sacerdotes, reges, et prophetas perfecisti, vultumque ecclesiæ in oleo exhilarandum per propheticam famuli tui vocem David esse prædixisti: ita quæsumus, omnipotens Pater, ut per hujus creaturæ pinguedinem hunc servum tuum sanctificare tua benedictione digneris, eumque in similitudinem columbæ pacem simplicitatis populo sibi subdito præstare, et exempla Aaron in Dei servitio diligenter imitari, regumque vestigia in consiliis scientiæ et æquitate judicii semper assequi, vultumque hilaritatis per hanc olei unctionem tuamque benedictionem, te adjuvante, commissæ plebi paratum habere facias. Per.”

Et tali eum benedictione glorifica, ut Davidicum teneat sublimitatis sceptrum salutis, ut sanctificatus protinus reperiatur in merita. Da ei a tuo spiramine cum mansuetudine ita regere populum sicut Salomonem fecisti regnum obtinere pacificum. Amen.

Tibi semper cum tremore sit subditus, tibi que militet, cum regno sit tuo clypeo protectus cum proceribus, et ubique maneat sine pugna victor. Amen.

Sis ei contra acies inimicorum lorica, in adversis galea, in prosperis patientia, in protectione clypeus sempiternus. Amen.

Vivat inter gentium catervas magnanimus. Sit ei in iudiciis æquitas singularis. Amen.

Locupletet eum tua prædita dextra, frugalem contineat patriam, et suis liberis tribuat profutura. Amen.

Da ei prolixitatem vitæ per tempora, et in diebus ejus oriatur justitia. Amen.

Et præsta ut gentes illi teneant fidem, proceres sui habeant pacem, diligentque caritatem. Amen.

Tu ejus mentem benignus inlabere, ut amore te timeat, et timore diligit. Amen.

Tu ei honor sis, tu gaudium, tu voluntas, tu in mœrore solatium, in ambiguitate consilium, in itinere consolator. Amen.

Tu in injuriis defensor, in tribulatione patientia, in ægritudine medicina. Amen.

In te habeat omne consilium, per te tuam discat a te commissam sapientiam regni gubernacula moderari, ut semper felix, semper a te gaudens, de tuis mereatur beneficiis gratulari, et æternis valeat commerciis copulari. Amen.

<sup>1</sup> I do not propose in these notes, as I have already observed in the preliminary dissertation, to do more than notice a few of the most important variations which occur in the Offices which lie before me.

These are, the Offices of the coronations of her present Majesty, reprinted in the text: of William IV. and Q. Adelaide: of George IV.: of George II. and Q. Caroline. For any remarks on the variations of the preceding and intermediate reigns, I am obliged to rely upon the authority, scarcely to be doubted in such respect, of reprints and accounts of the offices: for example, by Prynne, Sir E. Walker, and Sandford.

<sup>5</sup> The Order of K. George IV. adds here "xvij. The final Anthem;" which is also the arrangement of the Order for K. George II. As in this last instance, and in that also of K. William IV., a Queen was also crowned, both these orders add "xvij. the Queen's coronation."

Form and Order of her Majesty's Coronation.

SECT. I.—THE ENTRANCE INTO THE CHURCH.

The Queen, as soon as She enters at the West Door of the Church, is to be received with the following Anthem, to be sung by the Choir.<sup>6</sup>

ANTHEM.

I WAS glad when they said unto me, We will go into the House of the Lord. For there is the Seat of Judgement, even the Seat of the House of David. O pray for the peace of Jerusalem ; They shall prosper that love Thee. Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy Palaces.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son : and to the Holy Ghost ;

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be : world without end. Amen.

side of the middle aisle, and stay there to attend the coming of his Majesty, [their Majesties] and then going next before the regalia [the Queen's regalia,] to sing :”

The Queen in the mean time passes up through the Body of the Church, into, and through the Choir, and so up the Stairs to the Theatre; and having passed by Her Throne, She makes Her humble Adoration, and then kneeling at the Faldstool<sup>7</sup> set for Her before Her Chair, uses some short private Prayers; and after, sitting down (not in Her Throne, but in Her Chair before, and below, Her Throne,) there reposes Herself.

SECT. II.—THE RECOGNITION.<sup>8</sup>

The Queen being so placed, the Archbishop turneth to the East part of the Theatre, and after, together with <sup>7</sup> According to the pictures of the late coronations, this "faldstool" has changed much from its original and proper shape: it would now seem that a desk to kneel at is placed before the chair, upon which it would not be possible to sit, which was one end and object of the proper faldstool. The name however has been retained, and we have only to regret that the thing itself has been changed. Very probably this has been owing to the interference of subordinate officials: who, very ignorant of the purpose and meaning of many parts of the Service, and of the proper ornaments and the furniture to be provided, have nevertheless obtruded themselves into matters beyond their office.

The same alteration has taken place in France: and there also the proper faldstool has been supplanted by a cushioned desk to kneel at. How long this has been, I know not, in either case: but the faldstool was not used at the coronation of Louis XV. in 1722. See the plates, in the account of it Le Sacre de Louis XV, Roy de France. fol. And see below, note 11.

Du Cange explains the faldstool to be, "Sella plicatilis," which in fact it was: something like the common camp-stool of the present day. The same writer quotes various etymologies which have been proposed for the name the most probable of which, as it is the most obvious, derives it "Longobardico Falden, plicare, et Stool, sedes." In the coronation service of Charles V. of France so often cited above, the faldstool occurs in many of the illuminations; one is placed for the king

the Lord Chancellor, Lord Great Chamberlain, Lord High Constable and Earl Marshal (Garter King of Arms preceding them), goes to the other three sides of the Theatre in this Order, South, West, and North, and at every of the four sides, with a loud Voice, speaks to the People : And the Queen in the mean time standing up by Her Chair, turns and shews Herself unto the People at every of the four sides of the Theatre, as the Archbishop is at every of them, and while He speaks thus to the People :

SIRS, I here present unto you Queen VICTORIA, the Undoubted Queen of this Realm : Wherefore All you who are come this Day to do your Homage, Are you willing to do the same ?

God save Queen VICTORIA.

Then the Trumpets sound.<sup>9</sup>

another for the archbishop, and both alike. A low crossed, or folding-stool, which might be used either to kneel at, or to sit upon : examples of both of which occur in the manuscript.

<sup>8</sup> This title is of modern introduction, having been for the first time applied to this part of the Service, by Sandford, in his account of the coronation of James II. But the term is ancient; for

SECT. III.—THE FIRST OBLATION.

The Bible, Paten, and Cusp being brought by the Bishops who had borne them, and placed upon the Altar, the Archbishop goeth to the Altar and puts on his Cope, and standeth on the North Side of it: And the Bishops, who are to read the Litany, do also vest themselves. And the Officers of the Wardrobe, &c. spread Carpets and Cushions on the Floor and Steps of the Altar.

Which being done, the Queen, supported by the two Bishops, of Durham and Bath and Wells, and attended by the Dean of Westminster, the Great Officers, and the Lords that carry the Regalia going before Her, goes down to the Altar, and kneeling upon the Steps of it makes her First Oblation; Which is a Pall, or Altar-Cloth of Gold, delivered by an Officer of the Wardrobe to the Lord Great Chamberlain, and by Him, kneeling, to Her Majesty: and an Ingot or Wedge of Gold of a pound weight, which the Treasurer of the Household delivers to the Lord Great Chamberlain, and He to Her Majesty, kneeling: Who delivers them to the Archbishop, and the Archbishop standing (in which posture he is to receive all other Oblations) receives from Her, one after another, the Pall to be reverently laid upon the Altar, and the Gold to be received into the Bason, and with the like Reverence put upon the Altar.<sup>10</sup>

First Oblation,
a Pall and Wedge of Gold.

Then the Archbishop saith this Prayer, the Queen still kneeling:

<sup>10</sup> In those Orders where a queen was crowned with a king, here is inserted the rubric for her majesty's oblation also. "Then the Queen ariseth from her chair, and being likewise supported by two Bishops, and the Lords which carry her regalia going before her,

O GOD, who dwellest in the high and holy Place, with them also who are of an humble Spirit, Look down mercifully upon this Thy Servant, VICTORIA our Queen, here humbling Herself before Thee at Thy Footstool, and graciously receive these Oblations, which in humble Acknowledgement of Thy Sovereignty over all, and of Thy great Bounty to Her in particular, She hath now offered up unto Thee, through Jesus Christ our only Mediator and Advocate. Amen.

The Queen having thus offered, and so fulfilled his Commandment, who said, Thou shalt not appear before the Lord thy God empty; goes to Her Chair set for Her on the South side of the Altar, where She is to kneel at Her Faldstool<sup>11</sup> when the Litany begins.

In the mean time, the Lords who carry the Regalia, except those who carry the Swords, come in Order near to the Altar, and present Every One what He carries to the Archbishop, who delivers them to the Dean of Westminster, to be by Him placed upon the Altar, and then retire to the Places and Seats appointed for Them.

goeth down to the altar, and kneeling upon the cushions there laid for her, on the left hand of the king's, maketh her Oblation, which is a Pall, to be received also by the Archbishop, and laid upon the altar."

K. James I. offered "a Pall and twenty pieces of gold."

<sup>11</sup> The use of this term "faldstool," for the place at which the Sovereign is to kneel during the Litany, has been observed since the time of K. James I.

The Sermon was appointed to be preached here, followed by the oath, the 'Veni Creator' and a prayer, in the orders of K. James I. and Charles II. In James II.'s the Litany preceded the sermon: but, as will be remarked again presently, at that coronation there was no communion. The present order began with K. William III. and Queen Mary.

Thou shalt not bow down to them, nor worship them: for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, and visit the sins of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me, and shew mercy unto thousands in them that love me, and keep my commandments.

People. Lord, have mercy upon us, and incline our hearts to keep this law.

Archb. Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain: for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

People. Lord, have mercy upon us, and incline our hearts to keep this law.

Archb. Remember that thou keep holy the sabbath-day. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all that thou hast to do; but the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God. In it thou shalt do no manner of work, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, thy manservant, and thy maid-servant, thy cattle, and the stranger that is within thy gates. For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in hem is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the seventh day, and hallowed it.

People. Lord, have mercy upon us, and incline our hearts to keep this law.

Archb. Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour.

Archb. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife, nor his servant, nor his maid, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor any thing that is his.

People. Lord, have mercy upon us, and write all these thy laws in our hearts, we beseech thee.

¶ Then shall follow this Collect for the Queen, the Archbishop standing as before, and saying,

Let us pray.

Church, and so rule the heart of thy chosen Servant VICTORIA our Queen and Governor, that she (knowing whose Minister she is) may above all things seek thy honour and glory; and that we and all her subjects (duly considering whose Authority she hath) may faithfully serve, honour, and humbly obey her, in thee, and for thee, according to thy blessed word and ordinance, through Jesus Christ our Lord, who with thee and the Holy Ghost liveth and reigneth ever one God, world without end. Amen.

THE EPISTLE,

To be read by one of the Bishops. 1 Pet. ii. 13.

SUBMIT yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the King as supreme; or unto Governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil-doers, and for the praise of them that do well. For so is the will of God, that with well-doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men: As free, and not using your liberty for a cloke of maliciousness, but as the servants of God. Honour all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honour the King.

THE GOSPEL,

To be read by another Bishop, the Queen with the People standing. S. Matth. xxii. 15.

THEN went the Pharisees, and took counsel how they might entangle him in his talk. And they sent out unto him their disciples, with the Herodians saying, Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, neither carest thou for any man: for thou regardest not the person of men. Tell us therefore, What thinkest thou? Is it awful to give tribute unto Cæsar, or not? But Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said, Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites? Shew me the tribute-money. And they brought unto him a penny. And he said unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? They said unto him, Cæsar's. Then saith he unto them, Render therefore unto Cæsar, the things which are Cæsar's: and unto God, the things that are God's. When they had heard these words they marvelled, and left him, and went their way.

I BELIEVE in one God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth, And of all things visible and invisible:

And in one Lord Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God, Begotten of his Father before all worlds, God of God, Light of Light, Very God of very God, Begotten, not made, being of one substance with the Father, by whom all things were made: Who for us men, and for our salvation, came down from heaven, And was incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary, And was made man, And was crucified also for us under Pontius Pilate. He suffered and was buried, And the third day he rose again according to the Scriptures, And ascended into heaven, And sitteth on the right hand of the Father. And he shall come again with glory to judge both the quick and the dead: Whose kingdom shall have no end.

And I believe in the Holy Ghost, The Lord and giver of life, Who proceedeth from the Father and the Son, Who with the Father and the Son together is worshipped and glorified, Who spake by the prophets. And I believe one Catholick and Apostolick Church. I acknowledge one Baptism for the remission of sins. And I look for the resurrection of the dead, And the life of the world to come. Amen.

SECT. VI.—THE SERMON.

At the end of the Creed one of the Bishops is ready in the Pulpit, placed against the Pillar at the North-East Corner of the Theatre, and begins the Sermon, which is to be suitable to the great Occasion; which the Queen hears sitting in Her Chair on the South side of the Altar, over against the Pulpit.<sup>15</sup>

On Her right hand stands the Bishop of Durham, and beyond him, on the same side, the Lords that carry the Swords: On Her left hand the Bishop of Bath and Wells, and the Lord Great Chamberlain.

On the North side of the Altar sits the Archbishop in a purple Velvet Chair: Near the Archbishop stands Garter King of Arms: On the South side, East of the Queen's Chair, nearer to the Altar, stand the Dean and Prebendaries of Westminster.

<sup>14</sup> This rubric occurs for the first time. These seats, according to a rubric in another place in Civ. II.'s order, are to be "on the North side of the wall between the Archbishop and the pulpit."

uncovered during the offering and service following; when the service begins, he puts on his cap of crimson velvet turned up with ermins, and so continues to the end of it." Orders of Wm. IV. Geo. IV. &c.

SECT. VII.—THE OATH.

The Sermon being ended, and Her Majesty having on Monday the 20th Day of November 1837, in the presence of the Two Houses of Parliament, made and signed the Declaration,<sup>16</sup> the Archbishop goeth to the <sup>16</sup> This alteration, a very proper one, that the sovereign should previously in another place, before the two Houses of Parliament, make and sign "the Declaration," was made after the reign of K. Geo. II., from whose "Order," as the subject is important, I shall transcribe the form.

"Sect. vij. The Declaration and Oath.

Sermon being ended, the Archbishop goeth to the King, and standing before him, asketh him;

"Is your Majesty willing to make the Declaration?"

"The King answers;

"I am willing.

The Archbishop being ready with the said Declaration written in a roll of parchment, and reading it as followeth:

"I George the Second, by the grace of God King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c., do solemnly and sincerely, in the presence of God, profess, testify, and declare, That I do believe, that in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is not any Transubstantiation of the Elements of Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Christ, at or after the consecration thereof by any person whatsoever: and that the invocation or adoration of the Virgin Mary, or any other Saint, and the Sacrifice of the Mass, as they are now used in the Church of Rome, are superstitious and idolatrous. And I do solemnly, in the presence of God, profess, testify, and declare, that I do make this declaration, and every part thereof, in the plain and ordinary sense of the words read unto me, as they are commonly understood by English Protestants, without any evasion, equivocation, or mental reservation whatsoever, and without any dispensation already granted me for this purpose by the Pope, or any other authority or person whatsoever, or without any hope of any such dispensation from any person or authority whatsoever, or without thinking that I am, or may be acquitted before God or man, or absolved of this declaration, or any part thereof, although the Pope, or any other person or persons, or power whatsoever, should dispense with, or annul

Is Your Majesty willing to take the Oath ?

I am willing.

the same, or declare that it was null and void from the beginning.

“ The King makes, and audibly repeats and subscribes the same upon the top of his faldstool, a silver standish being brought out of the traverse for that purpose. Then the Archbishop administers the Coronation Oath, etc.”

<sup>17</sup> It does not seem improper to transcribe the questions and promises preceding the oath, as they were appointed, (with some unimportant verbal alterations) in the orders for K. James I., Chas. II. and James II.

“ The Archbishop ministreth the three first questions, and the King answereth them severally :

“ Archbishop. Sir, will you grant and keep, and by your oath confirm to the people of England the laws and customs to them granted by the Kings of England, your lawful and religious predecessors, and namely the laws, customs and franchises, granted to the clergy by the glorious king, St. Edward, your predecessor, according to the laws of God, the true profession of the Gospel established in this kingdom, agreeable to the prerogative of the kings thereof, and the ancient customs of this realm ?

“ King. I grant and promise to keep them.

“ Archbishop. Sir, will you keep peace, and godly agreement (according to your power) both to God, the Holy Church, the clergy, and the people ?

“ King. I will keep it.

“ Archbishop. Sir, will you (to your power) cause law, justice and discretion in mercy and truth to be executed to your judgment

“ King. I will.

“ Archbishop. Sir, will you grant to hold and keep the law and rightful customs which the commonalty of this your kingdom have: and will you defend and uphold them to the honour of God, so much as in you lieth ?

After these questions, follow in those “Orders” the “petition of the Bishops;” which has been already noted and transcribed see above, p. 9, Note 13. I need scarcely refer the student to the whole corresponding portion of the ancient Service.

Archb. Will You solemnly promise and swear to govern the People of this United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the Dominions thereto belonging, according to the Statutes in Parliament agreed on, and the respective Laws and Customs of the same?

Queen. I solemnly promise so to do.

Archb. Will You to Your power cause Law and Justice, in Mercy, to be executed in all Your Judgements?

Queen. I will.

Archb. Will You to the utmost of Your Power maintain the Laws of God, the true Profession of the Gospel, and the Protestant Reformed Religion established by Law? And will You maintain and preserve inviolably the Settlement of the United Church of England and Ireland, and the Doctrine, Worship, Discipline, and Government thereof, as by Law established within England and Ireland, and the Territories thereunto belonging? And will You preserve unto the Bishops and Clergy of England and Ireland, and to the Churches there committed to their Charge, all such Rights and Privileges, as by Law do, or shall appertain to Them, or any of Them?

Queen. All this I promise to do.

Then the Queen arising out of Her Chair, attended by Her Supporters, and assisted by the Lord Great Chamberlain, the Sword of State being carried before Her, shall go the Altar, and there make Her Solemn Oath in the sight of all the People, to observe the Premises: Laying Her right hand upon the Holy Gos-

The things which I have here before promised, I will perform, and keep. So help me God.<sup>19</sup>

And a Silver Standish.

SECT. VIII.—THE ANOINTING.

The Queen having thus taken Her Oath, returns again to Her Chair on the South Side of the Altar; and kneeling at Her Faldstool, the Archbishop beginneth the Hymn, Veni, Creator Spiritus, and the Choir singeth it out.

HYMN.

COME, Holy Ghost, our Souls inspire,
And warm them with thy Heavenly fire.
Thou who th'Anointing Spirit art,
To Us thy sevenfold Gifts impart.
Let thy bless'd Uction from above
Be to Us Comfort, Life, and Love.
Enable with Celestial Light

<sup>18</sup> There is certainly some obscurity about this term, "the Holy Gospel in the Great Bible." It might either mean the New Testament in that Book, or the proper Gospel appointed for the day, or simply be taken as a periphrasis for the Bible itself: the whole Scriptures being in a sense, a Gospel. The order for King

James I. speaks of "the Bible:" that for K. Charles II., which was followed by James II. directs the King to take the Oath "laying his hand upon the Evangelists."

<sup>19</sup> "So help me God, and the contents of this book." James I. Charles II. and James II.

The weakness of our mortal Sight :
 Anoint our Hearts, and cheer our Face,
 With the abundance of thy Grace :
 Keep far our Foes, give Peace at Home ;
 Where thou dost dwell, no Ill can come :
 Teach us to know the Father, Son,
 And Spirit of Both, to be but One.
 That so through Ages all along,
 This may be our triumphant Song ;
 In Thee, O Lord, we make our boast, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

This being ended, the Archbishop saith this Prayer :

O LORD, Holy Father, who by anointing with Oil didst of old make and consecrate Kings, Priests, and Prophets, to teach and govern thy People Israel: Bless and Sanctify thy Chosen Servant VICTORIA, who by our Office and Ministry, is now to be anointed with this Oil, and consecrated Queen of this Realm: Strengthen Her, O Lord, with the Holy Ghost the Comforter; Confirm and Stablish Her with thy free and Princely Spirit, the Spirit of Wisdom and Government, the Spirit of Counsel and Ghostly Strength, the Spirit of Knowledge and true Godliness, and fill Her, O Lord, with the Spirit of thy Holy Fear, now and for ever.
Amen.

This Prayer being ended, the Choir sing :

as it stood in the 17th century : I shall quote from the Order of K. James I., which was followed, generally, by Charles I. and II., and James II., except that in the case of Charles II. the oil having been consecrated previously, the proper preface and benediction were of course omitted.

“ The Litany being ended, the Archbishop beginneth to say aloud, Lift up your hearts. Answ. We lift them up unto the Lord. It is very meet, right, and our bounden duty, that we should at all times, and in all places, give thanks unto thee, O Lord, Holy Father, Almighty and Everlasting God, the strength of thy chosen and the exalter of the humble, which in the beginning, by the pouring out of the flood, didst chasten the sins of the world, and by a dove conveying an olive branch, didst give a token of reconciliation unto the earth, and again didst consecrate thy servant Aaron a priest, by the anointing of oil, and afterward by the effusion of this oil, didst make kings, and priests, and prophets, to govern thy people Israel, and by the voice of the prophet David, didst foretel, that the countenance of thy Church should be made cheerful with oil : We beseech thee, Almighty Father, that thou wilt vouchsafe to bless and sanc-

“ This done, the king ariseth from his devotion, and reposeth himself a while in his chair of estate. After a while, he goeth to the Altar, and there disrobbeth himself of his upper garments, his under apparel being made open, with loops only closed, at the places which are to be anointed.

“ The archbishop first anointeth his hands, saying,

“ Let these hands be anointed, as kings and prophets have been anointed, and as Samuel did anoint David to be king, that thou may'st be blessed, and established a King in this kingdom over this people, whom the Lord thy God hath given thee to rule and govern, which he vouchsafe to grant, who with the Father and the Holy Ghost. etc.

Then the Dean of Westminster layeth the Ampulla and Spoon upon the Altar, and the Queen kneeleth down at the Faldstool, and the Archbishop standing on the North side of the Altar, saith this Prayer or Blessing over Her :

OUR Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who by his Father was anointed with the Oil of gladness above his fellows, by his Holy Anointing pour down upon your Head and Heart the Blessing of the Holy Ghost, and prosper the Works of your Hands: that

"The prayer ended, the Archbishop proceedeth with his anointing. 1. Of the breast. 2. Between the shoulders. 3. Of both the shoulders. 4. Of the 'boughes' of both his arms. 5. Of his head in the crown.

"The anointing being done, the Dean of Westminster closeth the loops again which were opened. The Archbishop saith these prayers.

"God the Son of God, Christ Jesus our Lord, which was anointed by His Father, etc.

"God, which art the Glory of the righteous, etc.

"The prayers being ended, First a shallow 'Quoif' is put on the king's head, because of the anointing: if his Majesty's hair be not smooth after it, there is King Edward's ivory comb for that end.

"Then the colobium or dalmatica is put on him. etc."

In the Forms for K. James I., Charles II., and James II., after the anointing. before the presenting of the spurs, the "Colobium Sindonia," the "Supertunica," and the "Tynsen" or "Tissue Hose and Sandalls," were, in due order, to be put on.

by the Assistance of his Heavenly Grace you may preserve the People committed to your charge in Wealth, Peace, and Godliness; and after a long and glorious Course of ruling this Temporal Kingdom Wisely, Justly, and Religiously, you may at last be made Partaker of an Eternal Kingdom, through the Merits of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

SECT. IX.

The presenting of the Spurs and Sword,<sup>22</sup> and the Oblation of the said Sword.

The Spurs are brought from the Altar by the Dean of Westminster, and delivered to the Lord Great Chamberlain, who, kneeling down, presents them to the Queen, who forthwith sends them back to the Altar. The Spurs.

<sup>21</sup> There is considerable variety, in the later Forms, in this place. The order for K. William IV. adds; "When the Dean of Westminster will invest his Majesty with the supertunica."

The orders for George IV., and George II., adds, after the word "Chair:" "And the Dean of Westminster wipes and dries all the places anointed, with fine linen, or fine bombast wool, delivered to him by the Lord Great Chamberlain."

This sentence has been however erased, by the York Herald, in the copy before me: and this inserted with a pen. "When the Dean will invest his majesty with the supertunica of cloth of gold, and a girdle of the same for the sword."

The order for K. George II. appoints also:

"Then this short anthem is sung.

"Behold, O God our Defender, and look upon the face of thine anointed. Great prosperity givest thou unto thy King, and wilt shew loving kindness to thine anointed for evermore. Hallelujah."

State returned.

Then the Lord, who carries the Sword of State, returns the said Sword to the Lord Chamberlain (who gives it to an Officer of the Jewel House, to be deposited in the Traverse in King Edward's Chapel), and receiveth in lieu thereof, from the Lord Chamberlain, another Sword, in a Scabbard of Purple Velvet, which he will deliver to the Archbishop, who, laying it on the Altar, saith the following Prayer :

Another Sword

HEAR our prayers, O Lord, we beseech thee, and so direct and support thy Servant Queen VICTORIA, that She may not bear the Sword in vain; but may use it as the Minister of God for the terror and punishment of Evil-doers, and for the protection and encouragement of those that do well, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Delivered to the Queen.

Then the Archbishop takes the Sword from off the Altar, and (the Archbishops of York and Armagh, and the Bishops of London and Winchester, and other Bishops, assisting, and going along with him) delivers it into the Queen's Right Hand, and She holding it, the Archbishop saith :

RECEIVE this Kingly Sword, brought now from the Altar of God, and delivered to You by the hands of us the Bishops and Servants of God, though Unworthy.<sup>23</sup> With this Sword do Justice, stop the dern Forms, until the order of K. William IV. appointed the sword to be "girded," as well as presented. If there were any reasons why this omission should have been continued in the order for her present Majesty, it is nevertheless not easy to perceive the exact cause for the first example in the case of K. William IV.

<sup>23</sup> In the previous orders to that of K. William IV. the Form of delivery of the sword ended here, and was followed by this rubric and admonition :

growth of Iniquity, protect the holy Church of God, help and defend Widows and Orphans, restore the things that are gone to decay, maintain the things that are restored, punish and reform what is amiss, and confirm what is in good Order : that doing these things, You may be glorious in all virtue ; and so faithfully serve<sup>24</sup> our Lord Jesus Christ in this life, that You may reign for ever with Him in the Life which is to come. Amen.

Then the Queen, rising up, and going to the Altar, offers the Sword there in the Scabbard, delivering it to the Archbishop, who places it on the Altar ; the Queen then returns and sits down in King Edward's Chair : And the Lord who first received the Sword offereth the Price of it,<sup>25</sup> and having thus redeemed it, receiveth it from off the Altar by the Dean of Westminster, and draweth it out of the Scabbard, and carries it naked before Her Majesty during the rest of the solemnity.

The Investing with the Royal Robe,<sup>27</sup> and the Delivery of the Orb.

Robe.

Then the Queen arising, the Imperial Mantle, and the Dalmatic Robe, of Cloth of Gold, lined or furred with

<sup>25</sup> With a few verbal differences, of no importance, this whole section agrees with the corresponding one in the order drawn up for K. William IV., and in both Forms we have to regret the entire omission, (as in the case also of Q. Anne?) of "the investing with the Armill."

It will be well first to transcribe this omitted part, as appointed in the order of George II.

"Sect. x. The investing with the Armill and Royal Robe, and the delivery of the Orb.

"Then the king arising, the Dean of Westminster takes the Armill from the master of the great wardrobe, and putteth it about his majesty's neck, and tyeth it to the bowings of his arms, above and below the elbows, with silk strings; the archbishop standing before the king, and saying;

Receive this Armill as a token of the Divine Mercy embracing you on every side." Then follows the putting on of "the Robe Royal," or "Imperial Mantle."

In the printed copies of the order of K. George IV. this section is the same as in that of George II.: but in the copy, before mentioned as corrected by the York Herald, it would seem that for some cause or other, after the book was printed for use, an alteration was made, and, (I am bound to add) a blunder was very carefully arranged. For it was so managed (by whose advice I know not) that contrary to all precedent, the Armill was put on after the Dalmatic. The correction reads thus:

"Sect. X. The investing with the Royal Robe and the Armill, and the delivery of the Orb.

"Then the king arising, the Dean of Westminster takes the royal robe or dalmatic robe of state, of cloth of gold, delivered to him by the master of the great wardrobe, and puts it upon the king, standing, the crimson robe which he wore before being first taken off by the Lord Great Chamberlain, and then the Armill, with which the dean will also invest his majesty, standing before the king, and saying: Receive, etc."

Armins, is by an Officer of the Wardrobe delivered to the Dean of Westminster, and by him put upon the Queen, standing; The Queen having received it, sits down, and then the Orb with the Cross is brought from the Altar by the Dean of Westminster, and delivered to the Queen's Right Hand, by the Archbishop, pronouncing this Blessing and Exhortation:

The Orb.

RECEIVE this Imperial Robe, and Orb, and the Lord Your God endue You with Knowledge and Wisdom, with Majesty and with Power from on High; The Lord clothe You with the Robe of Righteousness, and with the Garments of Salvation. And when You see this Orb set under the Cross, remember that the whole World is subject to the Power and Empire of Christ our Redeemer. For He is the Prince of the Kings of the Earth; King of Kings, and Lord of Lords: So that no man can reign happily, who derives not his Authority from Him, and directs not all his Actions according to His Laws.

The investing with the Armill, as before remarked, was observed in the coronations before that of King William IV.: but the form of words varied; for example, in King James I.'s time:

"Receive the Armill, as a token of God's embracing, whereby all thy works may be defended against thy enemies, both bodily and ghostly, through Christ our Lord."

<sup>z</sup> This now called "Royal Robe" is the ancient pallium: the "open pall," as it is called in the orders of Charles II. and James II. The form of words in the last named order, is similar somewhat to the form in the text: but in the orders of Charles II. and James I., the ancient words of delivery were still used:

"Then the mantle or open Pall is put on by the Dean of Westminster: the archbishop saying:

"Receive this Pall, which is formed with four corners, to let thee understand, that the four quarters of the world are subject to the power of God, and that no man can happily reign upon earth, who hath not received his authority from heaven." James I.

SECT. XI.

The Ring.

Then an Officer of the Jewel House delivers to the Lord Chamberlain the Queen's Ring, who delivers the same to the Archbishop, in which a Table Jewel is en- chased; the Archbishop puts it on the Fourth Finger of Her Majesty's Right Hand,<sup>29</sup> and saith;

RECEIVE this Ring, the Ensign of Kingly Dig- nity, and of Defence of the Catholic Faith; and as You are this day solemnly invested in the Govern- ment of this earthly Kingdom,<sup>30</sup> so may You be sealed with that Spirit of Promise, which is the Earnest of an heavenly Inheritance, and reign with Him who is the blessed and only Potentate, to whom be Glory for ever and ever. Amen.

<sup>28</sup> In the orders of the xvij. century, the putting on of the crown preceded the delivery of the ring and sceptre. "The investiture per annulum et baculum," first appears as a title, like "the recognition," in Sandford's account of the coronation of James II.

"Receive the ring, etc." The forms of words in the orders of the xvijth century, differ very considerably in the whole of this part of the service, but I do not think it necessary to transcribe the whole of them.

 the Prophet David said "Thou lovest Righteousness, and hatest Iniquity; The Sceptre of thy Kingdom is a right Sceptre;" even Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

www.libtool.com.cn SECT. XII.

The putting on of the Crown.

The Archbishop, standing before the Altar, takes the Crown into his Hands, and laying it again before him upon the Altar, saith;

O GOD, who crownest thy faithful Servants with Mercy and loving Kindness; Look down upon this thy Servant VICTORIA our Queen who now in lowly Devotion boweth Her Head to thy Divine Majesty; and as thou dost this day set a Crown of pure Gold upon Her Head, so enrich Her Royal Heart with thy heavenly Grace; and crown Her with all Princely Virtue which may adorn the high Station wherein thou hast placed Her, through Jesus Christ our Lord, to whose be Honour and Glory for ever and ever. Amen.

Then the Queen still sitting in King Edward's Chair the Archbishop, assisted with the same Archbishops, and Bishops as before, comes from the Altar; the Dean of Westminster brings the Crown, and the Archbishop taking it of him, reverently putteth it upon the Queen's Head. At the sight whereof the People, with loud and repeated Shouts, cry, God Save the Queen, and the Trumpets sound, and by a Signal given, the great Gun at the Tower are shot off. As soon as the Queen is crowned, the Peers, &c. put on their Coronets and Caps.

BE strong and of a good Courage: Observe the Commandments of God, and walk in His Holy ways: Fight the good Fight of Faith, and lay hold on Eternal life; that in this World You may be crowned with Success and Honour, and when You have finished Your Course, receive a Crown of Righteousness, which God the Righteous Judge shall give You in that Day. Amen.

Then the Choir singeth this Anthem:

ANTHEM.

THE Queen shall rejoice in Thy Strength, O Lord: exceeding glad shall She be of Thy Salvation. Thou hast prevented Her with the Blessings of Goodness, and hast set a Crown of pure Gold upon Her Head. Hallelujah. Amen.

SECT. XIII.

The presenting of the Holy Bible.<sup>33</sup>

Then shall the Dean of Westminster take the Holy Bible, which was carried in the Procession, from off the Altar, and deliver it to the Archbishop, who with the same Archbishops and Bishops as before going along with him, shall present it to the Queen, first saying these Words to Her:

ceded in the orders of the xvijth century, by two other sentences. It was restored to its former state in the Form for George IV.

prompted by a truly religious spirit, and is to be much approved of upon sound and Christian principles. The form of words was considerably longer before the order for George IV. But I do not think that the present one has omitted anything to be desired.

OUR Gracious Queen: we present You with this Book, the most valuable thing that this world affords. Here is Wisdom: This is the Royal Law; These are the Holy Oracles of God. Blessed is he that reads, and they that hear the Words of this Book: that keep and do the things contained in it. For these are the Words of Eternal Life, able to make you wise and happy in this world, may wise unto salvation, and so happy for evermore, through Faith which is in Christ Jesus; to whom be Glory for ever. Amen.

Then the Queen delivers back the Bible to the Archbishop, who gives it to the Dean of Westminster, to be reverently placed again upon the Holy Altar, the Archbishops and Bishops who had assisted returning to their Seats.

SECT. XIV.

The Benediction, and Te Deum.

And now the Queen having been thus anointed and crowned, and having received all the Ensigns of Royalty, the Archbishop solemnly blesseth Her: And all the Bishops, with the rest of the Peers, follow every part of the Benediction, with a loud and hearty Amen.

the Benediction,

THE Lord bless and keep you: The Lord make the light of his Countenance to shine for ever upon you, and be gracious unto you: The Lord protect you in all your ways, preserve you from every evil thing, and prosper you in every thing good. Amen.

The Lord give you a faithful Senate, wise and upright Counsellors and Magistrates, a loyal Nobility, and a dutiful Gentry; a pious and learned and useful Clergy; an honest, industrious, and obedient Commonalty. Amen.

In your days may Mercy and Truth meet together, and Righteousness and Peace kiss each other; May Wisdom and Knowledge be the Stability of your Times, and the Fear of the Lord your Treasure. Amen.

The Lord make your Days many, your Reign prosperous, your Fleets and Armies victorious: and may you be revered and beloved by all your Subjects, and ever increase in Favour with God and man. Amen.

The glorious Majesty of the Lord our God be upon you: may He bless you with all temporal and spiritual Happiness in this world, and crown you with Glory and Immortality in the world to come. Amen.<sup>34</sup>

Then the Archbishop turneth to the People, and saith:

AND the same Lord God Almighty grant, that the Clergy and Nobles assembled here for this great and solemn Service, and together with them all the People of the Land, fearing God, and honouring the Queen, may by the merciful Superintendency of the Divine Providence, and the vigilant Care of our gracious Sovereign, continually enjoy Peace, Plenty, and Prosperity, through Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom, with the Eternal Father, and God the Holy Ghost, be Glory in the Church world without end. Amen.

"The Lord give you a religious and virtuous posterity to rule these kingdoms in all ages. Amen."

<sup>35</sup> There were proper reasons

why the following rubric was omitted in the order for her present Majesty; but, if it was not unseemly that former sovereigns should have vouchsafed so great a token of respect and of religious fellowship and love, it is not the Queen goes to the Chair on which Her Majesty first sat on the East Side of the Throne, the Two Bishops Her Supporters, the Great Officers, and other Peers, attending Her, every one in his place, the two Swords being carried before Her, and there reposes Herself.

Te Deum.

WE praise thee, O God: we acknowledge thee to be the Lord.

All the earth doth worship thee: the Father everlasting.

To thee all angels cry aloud: the heavens, and all the powers therein.

To thee Cherubin and Seraphin: continually do cry.

Holy, holy, holy: Lord God of Sabaoth.

Heaven and earth are full of the majesty: of thy glory.

The graciously fellowship of the Prophets: praise thee.

The noble army of Martyrs: praise thee.

The holy Church throughout all the world: doth acknowledge thee;

The Father: of an infinite Majesty;

Thine honourable, true: and only Son;

Also the Holy Ghost: the Comforter.

Thou art the King of Glory: O Christ.

was to say why the Form drawn up for H. William IV. should have been the first in which it was struck out.

"The Blessing being thus given, the King sitting down in his chair, vouchsafeth to kiss the archbishop and bishops assisting at his coronation. They kneeling before him one after another."

The kneeling would be, of course, as in the after act of doing homage.

Thou art the everlasting Son : of the Father.

When thou tookest upon thee to deliver man : thou didst not abhor the virgin's womb.

When thou hadst overcome the sharpness of death : thou didst open the kingdom of heaven to all believers.

Thou sittest at the right hand of God : in the glory of the Father.

We believe that thou shalt come : to be our Judge.

We therefore pray thee, help thy servants : whom thou hast redeemed with thy precious blood.

Make them to be numbered with thy saints : in glory everlasting.

O Lord, save thy people : and bless thine heritage.

Govern them : and lift them up for ever.

Day by day : we magnify thee.

And we worship thy Name : ever world without end.

Vouchsafe, O Lord : to keep us this day without sin.

O Lord, have mercy upon us : have mercy upon us.

O Lord, let thy mercy lighten upon us : as our trust is in thee.

O Lord, in thee have I trusted : let me never be confounded.

SECT. XV.—THE INTHRONIZATION.

The Te Deum being ended, the Queen will ascend the Theatre, and be lifted up into Her Throne by the Archbishop and Bishops, and other Peers of the Kingdom, and being Inthronized, or placed therein, all the Great Officers, Those that bear the Swords and the Sceptres, and the rest of the Nobles, stand round about the steps of

Then the Archbishop kisseth the Queen's Hand, and so the rest of the Bishops present after him.

After which the other Peers of the Realm do their Homage in like manner, the Dukes first by themselves, and so the Marquesses, the Earls, the Viscounts, and the Barons, severally; the first of each Order kneeling before her Majesty, and the rest with and about him, all putting off their Coronets, and the first of each Class beginning, and the rest saying after him:

Note, That Copies of this Homage must be provided by the Heralds for every Class of the Nobility.

The Peers having done their Homage, stand all together round about the Queen; and each Class or Degree going by themselves, or (as it was at the Coronation of King Charles the First and Second) every Peer one by one in Order, putting off their Coronets, singly ascend the Throne again, and stretching forth their hands, do touch the Crown on Her Majesty's Head, as promising by that Ceremony to be ever ready to support it with all their power, and then every one of them kisseth the Queen's Hand.

And the Bishops that support the Queen in the Procession may also ease Her, by supporting the Crown, as there shall be occasion.

ANTHEM.<sup>26</sup>

THIS is the day which the Lord hath made, we will rejoice and be glad in it.

Lord, grant the Queen a long life: that her years may endure throughout all generations.

She shall dwell before God for ever: O prepare thy loving mercy and faithfulness, that they may preserve her.

Blessed be the Lord thy God, who delighted in Thee to set Thee on the throne.

When the Homage is ended, the Drums beat, and the Trumpets sound, and all the People shout, crying out,

God save Queen VICTORIA.

Long live Queen VICTORIA.

May the Queen live for ever.

The Solemnity of the Coronation being thus ended, the Archbishop leaves the Queen in Her Throne, and goes down to the Altar.<sup>27</sup>

LET your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven. The Offertory.

Charge them who are rich in this world, that they be ready to give, and glad to distribute; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may attain eternal life.<sup>38</sup>

The Queen descends from Her Throne, attended by Her Supporters, and assisted by the Lord Great Chamberlain, the Sword of State being carried before Her, and goes to the Steps of the Altar, where taking off Her Crown, which She delivers to the Lord Great Chamberlain to hold, She kneels down.<sup>39</sup>

<sup>38</sup> “Then the organ plays, and the choir singeth, Anthem. Let my prayer come up into thy presence as incense, and let the lifting up of my hands be as an evening sacrifice.” Order of George II.

<sup>39</sup> I have already made some remark upon this rubric in the preliminary dissertation: and shall merely repeat here, that its introduction was most praiseworthy. In the earlier forms of William IV. George IV. etc. it stood thus;

REPORT IN THE

BY THE GRACE OF GOD WE RECEIVE THESE SIX GIFTS, AND ALL SUCH OTHERS AS SHALL BE GIVEN BY THEM, WE MAY WE HAVE THANKS OF THE LORD AND BARON OF THEM, AND BEYOND THE SEAS, AND BEYOND EVER-LASTING LIFE OF OUR LORD AND KING, THAT HIS SERVANT JOHN BISHOP OF DURHAM, BEING COME TO THE DISCHARGE OF HIS WEIGHTY DUTY, WHEREIN OF HIS GREAT GOODNESS THAT HEH HATH BEEN AND IS, AND SHALL BE, OUGHT HEY THESE GIFTS TO HAVE OUR FULLY THANKS AND ACKNOWLEDGEMENT.

After which the Archbishop said.

O GOD, who dwellest in the high and holy place, with them also who are of us, in the spirit: Look down mercifully upon this thy SERVANT VICTORIA our Queen, here kneeling Herself before Thee at thy ALTARS; and graciously receive these Offerings, which in humble acknowledgement of thy Sovereignty over all, and of thy great Bounty to Her in particular, appear to have been struck out before the actual solemnity. It is erased, in the copy before me, with a pen, by the York Herald.

She has now offered up unto thee, through Jesus Christ, our only Mediator and Advocate. Amen.

Then the Queen goes to Her Chair on the South Side of the Altar, and kneeling down at Her Faldstool, the Archbishop saith :

Let us pray for the whole state of Christ's Church militant here in earth.

ALMIGHTY and everliving God, who by thy holy Apostle hast taught us to make prayers and supplications, and to give thanks for all men: We humbly beseech thee most mercifully to receive these our prayers which we offer unto thy Divine Majesty, beseeching thee to inspire continually the universal Church with the spirit of truth, unity, and concord: and grant that all they that do confess thy holy Name, may agree in the truth of thy holy Word, and live in unity and godly love. We beseech thee also to save and defend all Christian Kings, Princes, and Governors; and specially thy Servant VICTORIA our Queen, that under her we may be godly and quietly governed: and grant unto her whole Council, and to all that are put in authority under her, that they may truly and indifferently minister justice, to the punishment of wickedness and vice, and to the maintenance of thy true religion and virtue. Give grace, O heavenly Father, to all Bishops and Curates, that they may both by their life and doctrine set forth thy true and lively Word, and rightly and duly administer thy holy Sacraments: And to all thy people give thy heavenly grace, and especially to this Congregation here present, that with meek heart and due reverence they may hear and receive thy holy Word, truly serving thee in holiness and righteousness all the days of their life. And we most humbly beseech thee of thy goodness, O Lord, to comfort and succour all them who in this transitory life are in trouble, sorrow, need, sickness, or any other adversity. And we also bless thy holy Name, for all thy servants departed this life in thy faith and fear; beseeching thee to give us grace so to follow their good examples, that with them we may be partakers of thy heavenly kingdom. Grant this, O Father, for Jesus Christ's sake, our only Mediator and Advocate. Amen.

The Exhortation.

YE that do truly and earnestly repent you of your sins, and are in love and charity with your neighbours, and intend to lead a new life, following the Commandments of God, and walking from henceforth in his holy ways; Draw near with faith, and take this holy Sacrament to your comfort; and make your humble confession to Almighty God, meekly kneeling upon your knees.

ALmighty God, Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, Maker of all things, Judge of all men; We acknowledge and bewail our manifold sins and wickedness, Which we from time to time most grievously have committed, By thought, word, and deed, Against thy Divine Majesty, Provoking most justly thy wrath and indignation against us. We do earnestly repent, And are heartily sorry for these our misdoings; The remembrance of them is grievous unto us; The burden of them is intolerable. Have mercy upon us, have mercy upon us, most merciful Father;

For thy Son our Lord Jesus Christ's sake, Forgive us all that is past, And grant that we may ever hereafter serve and please thee, In newness of life, To the honour and glory of thy name, Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Absolution.

ALMIGHTY GOD our heavenly Father, who of his great mercy hath promised forgiveness of sins to all them that with hearty repentance, and true faith, turn unto him; Have mercy upon you, pardon and deliver you from all your sins, confirm and strengthen you in all goodness, and bring you to everlasting life, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

After which shall be said,

Hear what comfortable words our Saviour Christ saith unto all that truly turn to him.

COME unto me, all that travail, and are heavy laden, and I will refresh you. S. Matth. 11. 28.

So God loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, to the end that all that believe in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life. S. John 3. 16.

Hear also what Saint Paul saith.

This is a true saying, and worthy of all men to be received, That Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners. 1 Tim. 1. 15.

Hear also what Saint John saith.

If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins. 1 S. John 2. 1.

Appendix to the Prayer for your hearts.

www.hbtool.com.cn Turn us into the Lord.

Give us your thanks unto our Lord God.

And let us not cut right so to do.

Therefore we turn to the Lord's Table,

In the most right and our bounden duty, that in all times and in all places, give praise and thanks to Lord holy Father, Almighty,

Which in this time given us thy Servant our Queen VICTORIA to be the Defender and the Protector of thy People; and that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in thy grace and favour.

In the company of Angels and Archangels, and of the company of heaven, we laud and magnify thy glorious Name, evermore praising thee, and saying thy holy Name, Lord God of hosts, heaven and earth, the Father of the glory. Glory be to thee, O Lord our God.

The People's Address.

When we presume to come to this thy Table,
O merciful Lord, trusting in our own righteness, we are thy manifold and great mercies. We are unworthy so much as to gather up the crumbs under thy Table. But thou art the same Lord, whose purpose is always to have mercy; Grant us therefore gracious Lord, so to eat the Flesh of thy dear Son Jesus Christ, and to drink his Blood, that our sinful bodies may be made clean by his Body, and our souls washed through his most precious Blood, and that we may evermore dwell in him, and he in us. Amen.

The Prayer of Consecration.

ALMIGHTY GOD, our heavenly Father, who of thy tender mercy didst give thine only Son Jesus Christ to suffer death upon the Cross, for our redemption, who made there (by his one oblation of himself once offered) a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world, and did institute, and in his holy Gospel command us to continue a perpetual memory of that his precious Death, until his coming again; Hear us, O merciful Father, we most humbly beseech thee, and grant that we receiving these thy creatures of Bread and Wine, according to thy Son our Saviour Jesus Christ's holy institution, in remembrance of his Death and Passion, may be partakers of his most blessed Body and Blood: who in the same night that he was betrayed (a) took bread, and when he had given thanks (b) he brake it, and gave it to his disciples, saying, Take, eat, (c) this is my Body which is given for you, do this in remembrance of me. Likewise after supper (d) he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of this, for this (e) is my Blood of the New Testament, which is shed for you and for many for the remission of sins: Do this, as oft as ye shall drink it, in remembrance of me. Amen.

(a) Here the Archbishop is to take the paten into his hands:

(b) And here to break the bread:

(c) And here to lay his hand upon all the bread.

(d) Here he is to take the cup into his hand:

(e) And here to lay his hand upon every vessel (be it chalice or flagon) in which there is any wine to be consecrated.

When the Archbishop, and Dean of Westminster, with the Bishops Assistants, namely, the Preacher, and those who read the Litany, and the Epistle and Gospel, have communicated in both kinds, the Queen advances to the Altar and kneels down, and the Archbishop shall administer the Bread, and the Dean of Westminster the Cup, to Her.

At the Delivery of the Bread shall be said,

THE Body of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was given for thee, preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life. Take and eat this in remembrance that Christ died for thee, and feed on him in thy heart by faith with thanksgiving.

At the Delivery of the Cup.

THE Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was shed for thee, preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life. Drink this in remembrance that Christ's blood was shed for thee, and be thankful.<sup>41</sup>

Post-Communion.

Then the Archbishop goeth on to the Post-Communion, saying,

OUR Father, which art in heaven; Hallowed be thy Name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, As it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, As <sup>41</sup> In all the Orders which preceded that of K. William IV. we find this rubric, or to the same effect. "While the king receives, the Bishop (Bishops, Geo. II. etc.) appointed for that service, shall hold a towel of white silk, or fine linen, before him." Order of George IV.

we forgive them that trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation; But deliver us from evil. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, For ever and ever. Amen.

Then this Prayer.

O LORD and heavenly Father, we thy humble servants entirely desire thy Fatherly Goodness, mercifully to accept this our sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving; most humbly beseeching thee to grant, that by the merits and death of thy Son Jesus Christ, and through faith in his Blood, we and all thy whole Church may obtain remission of our sins, and all other benefits of his Passion. And here we offer and present unto thee, O Lord, ourselves, our souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy, and lively sacrifice unto thee; humbly beseeching thee, that all we, who are partakers of this holy Communion, may be fulfilled with thy grace and heavenly benediction. And although we be unworthy, through our manifold sins, to offer unto thee any sacrifice; yet we beseech thee to accept this our bounden duty and service; not weighing our merits, but pardoning our offences, through Jesus Christ our Lord; by whom, and with whom, in the unity of the Holy Ghost, all honour and glory be unto thee, O Father Almighty, world without end. Amen.

Then shall be said,

GLORY be to God on high, and in earth peace, good will towards men. We praise thee, we bless thee, we worship thee, we glorify thee, we give thanks to thee for thy great glory, O Lord God, heavenly King, God the Father Almighty,

O Lord, the only begotten Son Jesu Christ; O Lord

God, Lamb of God, Son of the Father, that takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us. Thou that takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us. Thou that takest away the sins of the world, receive our prayer. Thou that sittest at the right hand of God the Father, have mercy upon us.

For thou only art holy, thou only art the Lord, thou only, O Christ, with the Holy Ghost, art most high in the glory of God the Father. Amen.

ANTHEM.

HALLELUJAH: For the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth. The kingdom of this World, is become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ. And he shall reign for ever and ever, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. Hallelujah.

SECT. XVIII.—THE FINAL PRAYERS.

ASSIST us mercifully, O Lord, in these our supplications and prayers, and dispose the way of thy servants towards the attainment of everlasting salvation; that among all the changes and chances of this mortal life, they may ever be defended by thy most gracious and ready help, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

OLORD our God, who upholdest and governest all things in Heaven and Earth; Receive our

ALMIGHTY GOD, who hast promised to hear the petitions of them that ask in thy Son's Name; We beseech thee mercifully to incline thine ears to us that have made now our prayers and supplications unto thee, and grant that those things which we have faithfully asked according to thy will, may effectually be obtained, to the relief of our necessity, and to the setting forth of thy glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep your hearts and minds in the knowledge and love of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord: And the blessing of God Almighty, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, be amongst you, and remain with you always. Amen.

The Queen being come into the Chapel, and standing before the Altar, will deliver the Sceptre with the Dove to the Archbishop, who will lay it upon the Altar there. The Queen will then be disrobed of Her Imperial Mantle, and arrayed in Her Royal Robe of Purple Velvet by the Lord Great Chamberlain.

The Archbishop, being still vested in his Cope, will then place the Orb in Her Majesty's Left Hand. And the Gold Spurs and King Edward's Staff are given into the hands of the Dean of Westminster, and by him laid upon the Altar. Which being done, the Archbishop and Bishops will divest themselves of their Copes, and leave them there, proceeding in their usual Habits.

Then Her Majesty will proceed through the Choir to the West Door of the Abbey, in the same manner as She came, wearing Her Crown, and bearing in Her Right Hand the Sceptre with the Cross, and in Her left the Orb; all Peers wearing their Coronets, and the Archbishops and Bishops their Caps.

off Her Circle of Gold,<sup>2</sup> and She kneeleth down, and four Peeres appointed for that Service, holding a rich Pall of Silk, or Cloth of Gold, over Her, the Archbishop poureth the Holy Oil upon the Crown of Her Head, saying these Words :

IN the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost : Let the anointing with this Oil increase your honour, and the grace of God's Holy Spirit establish you, for ever and ever. Amen.<sup>3</sup>

After the Anointing the Archbishop saith this Prayer :

O MOST merciful God, pour out abundantly thy grace and blessing upon this thy Servant Queen ADELAIDE, that as by our Office and Ministry she is this day anointed, and solemnly consecrated our Queen; so being sanctified by thy Holy Spirit, she may continue thy faithful and devout Servant, unto her life's end, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

<sup>3</sup> The reader will find in the preliminary dissertation, some remarks on the ancient manner of anointing the Queens of England, and which was observed until the Order for King William IV. and Queen Adelaide. The following is the rubric, &c. which follows the anointing of the head, in the Order for George II. and Queen

Caroline: with which the Orders for George III.'s Queen, and for the Queen of James II. generally agree.

"Then the chief lady assistant openeth her apparel, for the anointing her on the breast; which the archbishop also performeth, using the same words: Let the anointing with this oil, etc. After the anointing the archbishop saith this prayer: O most merciful, etc. Then the same lady closeth the Queen's robe at the breast (having first dried the place anointed) and afterwards putteth a linen coif upon her head, because of the anointing."

Coronation Service.

Then the Archbishop receiveth from the Master of the Jewel Office the Queen's Ring, and putteth it upon the Fourth Finger of Her Right Hand, saying,

The Ring.

RECEIVE this Ring, the seal of a sincere Faith; and God, to whom belongeth all Power and Dignity, prosper you in this your honour, and grant you therein long to continue, fearing him always, and always doing such things as shall please him, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Then the Archbishop taketh the Crown from off the Altar into his hands, and reverently setteth it upon the Queen's Head, saying,

The Crown.

RECEIVE the Crown of glory, honour, and joy; and God the Crown of the faithful, who by our Episcopal hands (though unworthy) doth this day set a Crown of pure Gold upon your head, enrich your Royal heart with his abundant grace, and crown you with all princely virtues in this life, and with an everlasting Crown of glory in the life which is to come, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Sceptre
and Ivory Rod.

OLORD, the giver of all perfection, Grant unto this thy Servant ADELAIDE our Queen, that by the powerful and mild Influence of her Piety and Virtue, she may adorn the high Dignity which she hath obtained, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

And he shall reign for ever and ever, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. Hallelujah.

As soon as this Anthem begins, the Queen ariseth and goeth from the Altar, supported by Her two Bishops, and so to the Theatre. And as She passeth by the King in His Throne, She boweth Herself reverently to His Majesty, and then is conducted to Her Own Throne, and without any farther Ceremony taketh Her place in it. Reposing Herself till She comes down, with the King, to receive the Holy Communion.

Modus faciendi Tonsuras.

Modus faciendi tonsuras et coronas primas.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> In the notes to this Office, and that which succeeds, of conferring Orders, I shall give the chief variations of the following manuscript pontificals: viz. the Bangor;—the Winchester;—and the Exeter. The first of these is unhappily mutilated in many parts of these offices; initial letters have been cut out, and of course with them much of the text upon the reverse of the leaves: and besides, the rubrics have been much rubbed and defaced.

As regards the arrangement of this first office, "ad clericum faciendum," the Exeter pontifical does not place it immediately before the services of Ordination, as in the text and the other MSS. but immediately succeeding the "Confirmatio puerorum," and before the "Dedicatio ecclesiarum." The reader will see this by referring to the table of the contents of that pontifical, in the first volume of this work, p. cxxij. Such an arrangement is unusual: for although the other MSS. do not agree in placing it next after the order of confirmation (as do the pontifical from which the text is taken, and another in Trinity College, Dublin, MS. B. Tab. 3. No. 7), yet they do not separate this first office, from the other forms of Ordination.

The title of this Office in the Exeter pontifical is, "Collatio primæ tonsuræ."

<sup>2</sup> This rubric, and the succeeding paragraph are omitted by the Bangor, Winchester, and Exeter pontificals. The second paragraph has reference to those cases in which confirmation had been neglected at its proper period, early childhood; and some particulars relating to females are mixed up with it, not concerned with the giving of the tonsure.

diæcesis suæ,<sup>4</sup> et ab episcopo confirmati, non conjugati, nec aliqua irregularitatis aut inhabilitatis<sup>5</sup> nota respersi. In quibus vero casibus episcopus potest dispensare primo cum eis dispenset, et si non sunt confirmati, confirmet eos ut supra.<sup>6</sup>

ferri potest." And in his commentary upon this, Catalani has fallen into an error, where he says that the Tonsure, "ex omnium scriptorum sententia, et ex recepta ecclesiæ praxi, quovis anni tempore, qualibet die, et hora, et loco conferri potest." Comment. in Pontif. Rom. Tom. 1. p. 49. That the modern Roman Use knows no limit as to time for the conferring of the Tonsure, is evident from a comparison of the rubric at the commencement of the office "De minoribus ordinibus," concerning which last it is expressly stated to be lawfully conferred "in mane tantum."

<sup>4</sup> The general opinion of the canonists seems to be, that a bishop might have conferred the tonsure (but not other orders, even the minor) out of his own diocese, "subditis suis." This however would be influenced by the custom of the time. The reader will find more remarks upon this subject in the preliminary dissertation.

<sup>5</sup> Under this head would fall ignorance, such as of the rudiments of the Faith, or to be unable to read or write. As to the first, from the earliest ages a knowledge of the creed was required of those who were to be baptized, and much more therefore of candidates for the ministry: as to the second, whatever the practice might have been, the theory in England always was, that every clerk should be able at least to read: and this was the well-known test by which men were allowed "benefit of clergy." In the thirteenth century, it was strictly forbidden by Boniface VIII, "Nequis episcopus infanti, vel illiterato tonsuram clericalem conferret, ita ut qui contrafecerit, in eo in quo peccaverit puniatur, per unum annum a collatione clericalis tonsuræ dumtaxat noverit se suspensum." De temp. Ordin. cap. ult.

That confirmation should precede ordination to any rank or degree in the ministry of the Church, is a very ancient rule, and, I doubt not, apostolic. To this effect it would certainly seem that we should interpret the viijth canon of the council of Nice: "Περι των ονομαζοντων μεν εαντους Καθαρους ποτε, προσερχομενων δε τη καθολικη και αποστολικη εκκλησια, εδοξε τη αγια και μεγαλη συνοδη, ωστε χειροθετουμενους αυτους μενειν οντως εν τη

Et debet hoc sacramentum et omnia alia, excepta causa necessitatis, a jejuno et jejunis ministrari. Masculi vero teneant masculos, et feminae femellas, nullus tamen aut nulla proprios. Si sint adulti aut dolo capaces, prius tenentur confiteri, quia olim etiam solebant postea communicare. Et si sint ita magni quod nequeant brachiis portari, stent appodiando super pedem compatris aut commatris, quia hoc sacramentum datur ad robur, sicut Spiritus Sanctus dabatur de cælo apostolis ad plenam constantiam Christum confitendi et prædicandi. Episcopus autem stando cum stola, aut lassatus sedendo, sed nunquam equitando, officium confirmationis exequatur.

κλήρω.” Some have interpreted this sentence of the canon to mean, an imposition of hands by way of reconciliation only, or penance: others, that it enjoined a reordination. But the first is impossible, because the canon is speaking of some certain rite to be used only with regard to the Novatians, and none others: which was not true of penance or reconciliation. The suggestion as to reordination is equally erroneous: for the council expressly recognized the Novatian Orders, leaving (as Beverege in his Notes says) their bishops, bishops: and their priests, priests: and this learned writer appeals to the ancient scholiasts, Balsamon and Zonaras, upon the point. Cf. Beveregs. Pandect. Canon. Tom. 1. p. 68. Annot. Tom. 2. p. 67. and Routh. Script. Ecc. Opusc. Tom. 2. p. 437. There is more-over no doubt that denial of the grace of confirmation was a chief heresy of the Novatians. S. Cornelius in his epistle to Fabius charges it against their leader, in a particular case: Theodoret declares the same: and as if to set the question, as to the Nicene canon, completely at rest, we have the contemporary order of the synod of Laodicea, in the year 320. “Quod ii, qui ex hæresibus, hoc est, Novatianis, —, — convertuntur, —, — non sunt admittendi priusquam omnem hæresin anathematizaverint, — et tunc deinceps eos, qui apud illos fideles dicebantur, fidei symbola discentes, et sancto Chrismate inunctos, sic sancto mysterio communicare.” Compare the vijth canon of the 2nd General Council, and the scholia of Balsamon and Zonaras: Bevereg. Pandect. Tom. 1. p. 97. 455.

Adjutorium nostrum in nomine Domini.

<sup>7</sup> The Winchester and Bangor MSS. begin this office with the exhortation, "Oremus, dilectissimi," &c. called by the first, the "Præfatio;" by the second, the "Benedictio ad clericum faciendum." In the Exeter pontifical we have a commencement different from the other three. "Præfatio ad coronam faciendam. V. Adjutorium nostrum. etc. R. Qui fecit. Dominus vobiscum. Oremus. Oremus, dilectissimi. etc."

morati ritus et S. Ambrosius Lib. vj. Hexameron, Cap. ix. ubi [aliam] reddit rationem his plane verbis: 'Flexibile genu, quo præ cæteris Domini mitigatur offensa, ira mulcetur, gratia promovetur: unde ordinator, et ordinandus genua flectunt, ut divinam gratiam uterque digne promoveat, unus recipiat, alter conferat.'" Catalani. Comment. in Pontif. Rom. tom. 1. p. 62. Cf. Goar. Euchol. p. 279. note 10.

<sup>9</sup> It does not appear that the bishop was of necessity to be fully vested, except he was about to perform this office, during the celebration of the Eucharist: when of course, on account of that holy service, and not on account of the conferring the tonsure, it would be required. A MS. in the Vatican, cited by Catalani (Comment. in Pontif. Rom. tom. 1. p. 56), has a rubric very important on this point. "Prima tonsura potest dari omni tempore, sive in missa, sive extra missam, sive in mane, sive sero, dummodo episcopus habeat stolum, et ordinatus superpelliceum."

<sup>1</sup> The titles, as well as the beginnings of this office, vary considerably in the MSS. The Bangor pontical is very short: and also mutilated in this place. But so far as it can be read, it is as follows.

“Qualiter ordines agantur. —” — dicat archidiaconus: Accedant qui ordinandi sunt ostiarii. Tunc accedant immediate —” — : tradat eis episcopus claves ecclesiae dicens: Sic agite, quasi reddituri Deo rationem pro iis rebus, quae istis clavibus recludantur. Tunc dicit eis archidiaconus ad ostium. Praefatio ostiariorum. Deum Patrem etc. Oremus. Et diaconus. Flectamus genua. Levate. Oratio. Domine sancte etc.”

The following is the order of the Winchester MS.

“Hoc modo ordinandi sunt ostiarii: lectores: exorcistae: acolyti: subdiaconi: diaconi: sacerdotes. Mense primo: quarto: septimo: decimo. Postquam chorus officium et kyriel' ex more finierit, introducantur omnes ordinandi, ab archidiacono, vocati ex nomine, ante domnum praesulem.

Primo ergo, secundo, et tertio, monemus et inhibemus sub pœna anathematis, ne quis se ingerat ordinandum, nisi prius examinata persona cum titulo matriculatus et infra scriptus fuerit et vocatus. Ne quis etiam mortalis peccati conscius, vel excommunicatus, aut suspensus, ordines recipiat, nisi prius potestatem habenti confiteatur et debite absolvatur. Ne autem ignorans ignoretur irregulares, qui secundum sacros canones ab ordinibus prohibentur, duximus seriatim et per ordinem specificandos.

Quicumque homicida. Item ecclesiarum incendiarius, seu earum fractor violenter. Item advocatus in causa sanguinis, vel notorie perjurus. Item executor sævorum tormentorum in publicis administrationibus. Item simoniacus, qui quodcumque beneficium aut titulum illicite adeptus, vel religionem taliter est ingressus.

The Exeter pontifical begins :

“ Qualiter ordines generales agantur. Primo fiat sermo si est dicendus. Postea fiant inhibitiones sequentes in generalibus ordinibus, si episcopo placuerit, ad terrorem male subintrantium. Ex parte Dei omnipotentis. etc.”

The chief variations of this pontifical will be noticed as we proceed.

Item inventor vel fautor simoniacarum pactio-rum. Item apostata a fide vel religione, non reconciliatus.
 Item qui ab episcopis hæreticis, schismaticis, gratiam sedis apostolicæ non habentibus, scienter alias ordines recepit. Item qui sub falso titulo vel ficto, aut alias pacto inito cum suo præsentatore de hujusmodi titulo postquam ordinatus fuerit, eidem restituendo vel alias occasione hujusmodi eundem non inquietando, vel qui annuam pensionem vel quodcumque emolumentum temporale præsentanti, vel promotionem procuranti, sub quocumque promiserit colore. Item per saltum ad alios ordines promotus. Item prius conjugatus, nisi hoc faciat in casu a jure permissio. Item nullus qui excommunicatus scienter ordines recepit alias, et in susceptis ministrare præsumpsit. Item bigamus, vel corruptarum maritus. Item Deo sanctarum virginum violator. Item nullus sortilegus, vel nigroman-ticus, vel prohibitarum artium doctor, sive fautor.
 Item morbo sontico, vel caduco, vel lunatico, vel alio incurabili laborans, vel corpore vitiatus. Item illegi-timus, nisi fuerit cum eo sufficienter dispensatum.
 Item servus natus, præter conscientiam et voluntatem domini sui. Item nullus alterius diocesis, nisi literas dimissorias habuerit, ac etiam titulum sufficien-tem. Item inhibemus quod nullus ordinem subdiaconatus recipiat, nisi sit ætatis octodecim annorum, dia-conatus viginti, presbyteratus viginti quatuor, et vicosimum quintum annum attigerit. Item nullus religionus de jure vel facto non professus. Item nullus curatus beneficiatus, qui infra annum non fuerit ordinatus in presbyterum, a tempore curæ susceptæ et pacifico possessionis adeptæ, nisi ex dispensatione, qua etiam rito sit usus juxta constitutionem cum ex eo.
 Item nullus sine vero titulo, vel cujus titulus ad non

The Exeter pontifical omits the next three long paragraphs, and proceeds immediately to the Office: with the Mass proper to it: as follows.

"Statuto die ordinum generalium, dicto introitu missæ cum Kyrie eleison. Et in oratione et ordine pro ordinandis qui sequitur.

"Exaudi, quæsumus Domine, supplicum preces, et devoto tibi pectore famulantes perpetua defensione custodi: ut nullis perturbationibus impediti, liberam servitatem tuis semper exhibeamus officiis. Per Dominum. Sub uno. Per Dominum.

"Tunc sedeat episcopus ante medium altaris, et introducantur omnes ordinandi, et stent similiter ante episcopum. Tunc unus archidiaconus voce sonora per modum lectionis versus ad episcopum dicat:

Postulat sancta mater, etc."

med a part of, the administration of the Eucharist. Not to mention the 8th Book of the post. Constitutions, it has been argued that we have the authority of the sacred Scripture for the necessity, if I may say so, of this observance. We read in the Acts of the Apostles, "As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away." Our translators followed the Vulgar Latin, but the original is "λειτουργούντων:" a term which not only in the other parts of the New Testament, but in the Fathers, is always used, unless qualified by the context, "pro ministerio sacrificii:" and hence the name itself of "Liturgy." In the translation by Erasmus, λειτουργούντων is rendered "sacificantibus."

An obvious reason for this would of course be, from the probability of the presence of large numbers of both people and clergy: which in the primitive Church

even during the times of persecution, was looked upon as necessary. Thus S. Cyprian says that Cornelius was consecrated, "de clericorum pene omnium testimonio, de plebis, quæ tunc affuit, suffragio, et de sacerdotum antiquorum consensu." Epist. 52. And again he explains why this should be: "Coram omni synagoga jubet Deus constitui sacerdotem: id est instruit, et ostendit, ordinationes sacerdotales non nisi sub populi assistentia conscientia fieri oportere, ut plebe præsentem, vel detegantur malorum crimina, vel bonorum merita prædicentur, et sit ordinatio justa, et legitima, quæ omnium suffragio et judicio fuerit examinata." Epist. 68.

<sup>5</sup> I may remark, that very anciently in the Latin Church, as we learn from the sacramentary of Gregory, the greater orders were conferred before the reading of the Gospel, and the minor after the communion. But the later practice is of high antiquity, as is shown by Menard from an old Ordo Romanus, and other early MSS. in his notes to that sacramentary, p. 271.

The reader has already seen, note 1, that the Bangor MS. has no general exhortation, &c., for all who were to be ordained to whatever order, but commences at once with the “ostiarii.”

<sup>9</sup> Besides the larger and more general admonitions which were addressed according to the judgment of the bishop, to each order of the candidates, previously to the commencement of the service itself, it has always been the practice from the earliest ages, of which any rituals remain, to admonish also in some set form before the actual conferring of each Order. Thus it was the subject of the 3rd canon of the 3rd council of Carthage. A.D. 390: “ Item placuit, ut ordinandis episcopis, vel clericis, prius ab ordinatoribus suis decreta conciliorum auribus eorum inculcentur, ne se aliquid contra statuta concilii fecisse asserant.” Concil. edit. Mansi. Tom. 3. col. 880. And again, a few years after, in the famous 4th Council of Carthage, which forms a basis upon which succeeding Ordinals have been framed, the ixth canon has especial reference to this point, as concerned the “ostiarii,” the lowest order ordained by a bishop: “Ostiarius cum ordinatur, postquam ab archidiacono instructus fuerit, qualiter in domo Dei debeat conversari, ad suggestionem archidiaconi, tradat ei episcopus claves ecclesiæ de altario, dicens: Sic age, quasi redditurus Deo rationem pro his rebus, quæ his clavibus recluduntur.” Ibid. Col. 951.

<sup>12</sup> This ceremony was of later introduction than the delivery of the keys: although of such antiquity that it was introduced into the ordinal of the Western Church, before the conversion of the Saxons by S. Augustine. Hence there is no pontifical extant, of English use, in which it does not occur. Neither the Carthaginian Council, just cited, nor the Gelasian sacramentary, mentions it: but it is found in the Gregorian sacramentary, and in some very ancient MSS., still extant. A MS. pontifical, cited by Martene, (de Ant. Ecc. rit. Tom. 2. p. 18.) directed the bishop not to deliver the keys to the candidates, but only to shew them to them. I need scarcely perhaps remind the reader, that these keys were not the keys which were afterwards to be used, in the particular churches, to which the ostiarii were to be ordained, but any keys: and of any material: provided only, say the canonists, that in shape and form they were keys, apt and able to open some lock.

The modern Roman pontifical has introduced another ceremony in this place, one which is allowed to be modern, and for which no authority can be found in the earlier rituals. “ Tradit etiam eis funem campanarum, faciens eos campanas pulsare.” It was, doubtless, the duty of the ostiarii to ring the bells of the church, but not in the earliest ages: for then it was part of the office of the priest: as Amalarius says: “ Ne despiciat presbyter hoc opus agere, ut in isto sit imitator filiorum Aaron.” De ecc. off. Lib. 3. Cap. 1. And in Charlemagne's Capitular is an express order; “ Ut sacerdotes signa tangant horis canonicis.” Lib. vj.

Deum Patrem omnipotentem, fratres carissimi. suppliciter deprecemur, ut hos famulos suos bene  $\text{†}$ dicere dignetur, quos in officium ostiariorum eligere dignatus est, ut sit eis fidelissima cura diebus ac noctibus ad distinctionem horarum certarum, ad invocandum nomen Domini nostri Jesu Christi.

Cap. 168. But long before the reformation, this duty, as I have said, had devolved upon the ostiarii; and there is a very plain reference to it in the Preface which almost immediately follows in the text. Probably the ceremony of giving them the bells, (if I may so call it) was added in the revised Roman pontifical, in order to supply what appeared to be an omission.

The Exeter pontifical does not include the particulars of the proper mass: it proceeds therefore,

“Tunc sedeat episcopus, et legatur lectio prima, cum graduali, quibus dictis sequitur. Oremus. Et dicitur secunda oratio, qua dicta dicat archidiaconus: Recedant qui ordinati sunt ostiarii: accedant qui ordinandi sunt lectores. Tunc episcopus sedens dicit eis: Lectorem oportet. etc.”

Et stando, vel circueundo, tradat eis codicem divinorum lectionum quem recipient inter manus, dicente episcopo sine nota, et sapius eos repetendo, et hoc stando, sic:

Accipite,<sup>15</sup> et estote verbi Dei relatores, habituri, si fideliter et devote impleveritis officium vestrum, partem cum iis qui verbum Dei ministraverint.<sup>16</sup> cio, cum ingressus synagogam traditus est ei liber Isaie prophete.

Accipe, et esto lector verbi Dei, habiturus, si fideliter et utiliter impleveris officium, partem cum eis qui verbum Dei ministraverint.” Mansi. Concil. Tom. 3. Col. 951.

The student will observe, that in this canon, the form is in the singular number; as also above, see Note 9. But this variation in the earliest ages was, in a manner, optional: and in MSS. of the same date, we find the forms of ordination sometimes in the singular, sometimes in the plural. If only one person was to be ordained, the plural form was of course to be changed into the singular.

S. Cyprian in his 33rd epistle, alludes to the address which was previously to be made to the people. “Ad clerum et plebem de Aurelio lectore ordinato. —

In ordinationibus clericis, fratres carissimi, solemus vos ante consulere, et mores, ac merita singulorum communi consilio ponderare.” Opera. p. 46.

Although the general vessels and ornaments of the church were delivered to the care of the "ostiarium," yet it would seem from the Acts of the African persecution, under Diocletian, that the Holy Scriptures were given into the custody of the "Lectores." For the answers of several bishops, who were required to surrender the sacred books, is there said to have been, "Scripturas lectores habent." And another remarkable reply of two subdeacons: "Plus non habemus, quia subdiaconi sumus, sed lectores habent codices." Cf. Catalan. Comment. Tom. 1. p. 84. Therefore, probably, the chief ignominy of the term "Traditores" would have lain against the "Lectores:" although Bingham in his Antiquities, upon a wide interpretation of a canon of the first council of Arles, extends it to all who betrayed any of the goods or utensils of the church. Book. xvi. Cap. vj. (Vol. 6. p. 125.)

Hoc ergo donum gratiæ Dei, ad fidem pertinet. Per fidem enim fit expulsio dæmonum, et omnia subjiciuntur vobis, ut Dominus ait. ‘ Amen, dico vobis, si habueritis fidem et non hæsitaveritis, si dixeritis monti huic, tolle hinc, et jactare in mare : fiet.’ Timere etiam debent exorcistæ, ne dæmonibus, quibus timori esse debent per meritum religiosæ vitæ, despecti fiant : et de eis accidat quod de septem filiis Scævæ Judæi Actus Apostolorum narrant. The Church of Rome, although in practice she has suffered the office of exorcists to become extinct, yet preserves the ceremony, for it is nothing more, of their ordination. And it is remarkable, that with a strange disregard both of every ancient precedent, and of the reason of the thing, her modern pontifical has this rubric:—"Liber exorcismorum, cujus loco dari potest pontificale, vel missale." Morinus (de Sacr. Ordin. p. 185) upon this merely observes, and Catalani (Comment. tom. 1. p. 86) has nothing more to say, "De formis istis et materiis disponit ecclesia, ut æquum esse judicat." nissum est, omnino se contineant. Ait enim scriptura, 'Mundamini, qui fertis vasa Domini.' Vasa ergo Domini ferentes, ab omni carnali voluntate debent esse immunes. Vasa vero Domini muntant, et diaconibus offerunt, qui mentes fidelium vitiiis expurgant, et bonis moribus instruunt. Et sic ad majora capienda, moribus suis offerunt. Scyphum aquæ, et aquam, manile cum manutergio ab archidiacono accipiunt. De his vero levitis et sacerdotibus ministrare debent.

"Si enim sacerdotes et levitæ aliquoties humanius quam decet vixerint, tunc subdiaconi aquam conferunt, dum verba sacræ lectionis eisdem ut quod admissum est diluant, ad memoriam reducant. Per aquam enim sacra scriptura aliquoties designatur. Hanc vero monitionem non arguendo, sed cum omni humilitate ut pii filii patrem monendo, facere debent. Ne cum Cham patris inebriati pudenda denudata deridende, æterna maledictione damnentur: sed cum piissimo filio opprobrium occultante benedictionem mereantur.

"Per manutergium, quod ex lino cum nimio labore conficitur, bonorum labor exprimitur: a quo omne peccatum confessione mundatum omnino deletur. Ait enim scriptura, 'Sicut aqua extinguit ignem, ita eleemosyna extinguit peccatum.' Hoc vero Dominus functus est officio, quando pedes apostolorum aqua lavit, et linteo extersit.

"Deinde cum ordinantur, quia manus impositionem non accipiunt, patenam de manu episcopi accipient vacuum, et calicem vacuum, dicente episcopo:

"Videte cujus. etc." Pontif. Winton.

 ... *subdiaconi cum ordinantur, quia nullius unquam manus non accipiunt, patenam de manu
 ... et calicem vacuum:*" de manu

... De ord. p. 322. From these and other authorities of about the same date, it has been necessarily concluded that at that time the subdeacons did not approach the altar itself, but although admitted within the sanctuary, handled the sacred vessels and other necessities at the desk or祭台. Admittance even into the sanctuary, I would observe, was a privilege which grew up in later days than the council of Laodicea: which in its 21st canon strictly prohibited it to the subdeacons. Cf. also Goar. Euchol. p. 127. note 12. If we could interpret the admission of the English subdeacons strictly, we might conclude that the duties of subdeacons were continued to be, as of old, up to the time of the reformation. I must here remind the reader that the degree of subdeacon is taken, in the modern church of Rome, only as a step to the higher orders of deacon and priest; in the same way as the minor orders are taken, with no intention of remaining in them.

Having mentioned the council of Laodicea I may add, that its 21st canon ordered the "minister" (by which word both Balsa-mon and Zonaras, under can. xxi. understand the subdeacon) "not to leave the doors." Whence we learn that anciently this was a portion of their duties: as Zonaras says: "antiquis temporibus ad fores ecclesie consistere, ibique catechumenis, et iis qui in penitentium ordine censebantur, cum opus foret, emittendis operam dare hypodiaconi soliti sunt." Bevereg. Pandect. tom. 1. p. 463.

"Subdiaconus cum ordinatur, quia manus impositionem non accipit, patenam de episcopi manu accipit vacuum, et calicem vacuum. De manu vero archidiaconi, urceolum cum aqua, et mantile, et manutergium." Concil. Carth. can. v. There is not here, nor in the text, any mention made of the book of the Epistles; which is now ordered to be delivered also, by the revised Roman ordinal. But for several centuries in the church of England it had become customary for the subdeacon to read the epistle, instead of the "Lector." Upon this point I must refer the reader to my work on the "Ancient Liturgy," p. 41. Note 50 (2nd edit.) where he will find some remarks upon the subject. I will add here, that one of the earliest canons which bear upon it, is the 14th of the council pro archidiaconi<sup>43</sup> accipiunt urceolum plenum cum manibili, id est, manutergio, dicente illis episcopo sine nota, stando :

Oremus Deum ac Dominum nostrum, fratres carissimi, ut super servos suos quos ad subdiaconatus officium vocare dignatus est, effundat benedictionem suam et gratiam, ut in conspectu ejus fideliter servi-entes, prædestinata sanctis præmia consequantur, adjuvante Domino nostro Jesu Christo.

Oremus.

Diaconus. Flectamus genua. Levate.

Domine sancte, Pater omnipotens, æterne Deus, be-

<sup>43</sup> There is considerable variety here between the pontificals. The Winchester directs : " Postea vero accipiant ab archidiacono urceolum cum aquamabili ac manutergio." With this the Bangor agrees, with the addition "urceolum vacuum." And in the address just above, Note 40, we have the candidates reminded that they were to receive "manile cum manutergio ab archidiacono." The Exeter pontifical gives another direction ; viz. " Tunc surgens episcopus, tradat cuilibet calicem vacuum cum patena ad tangendum, quem sequatur archidiaconus cum urceolo et manutergio et aqua, dicente episcopo circumeundo."

ne. ¶ dicere dignare hos famulos tuos, quos ad subdiaconatus officium vocare<sup>44</sup> dignatus es, ut eos in sacrario sancto tuo strenuos solictosque cœlestis militiæ instituas excubitores, sanctisque altaribus tuis fideliter subministrent, et requiescat super eos spiritus sapientiæ et intellectus, spiritus consilii et fortitudinis, spiritus scientiæ et pietatis; et repleas eos spiritu timoris tui, et eos in ministerio divino confirmes,<sup>45</sup> ut obedientes facto atque dicto parentes, tuam gratiam consequantur. Per Dominum, in unitate ejusdem.

The reader must not forget that this Winchester MS. is earlier, by nearly two hundred years, than the Bangor pontifical: being of the early part of the twelfth, if not of the latter part of the eleventh century. See Vol. 1. p. 1. Note 2.

<sup>47</sup> It has been stated in the preceding note, that the Winchester pontifical does not direct either the maniple or the tunic to be delivered. And in fact both of them were of late introduction into the Church, as part of the vestments of subdeacons. We might have argued that not only the tunic but the maniple was added in the English Church (from the fact of neither being spoken of in the Winchester, and both in the Bangor MS.) about the twelfth century. But it is a curious fact, that the very ancient pontifical of Archbishop Egbert of York, from which Martene has printed extracts, has this rubric, in the ordination of a subdeacon. "Et tradat ei calicem, et patenam, et manipulum." De ecc. ant. rit. tom. 2. p. 34. Whether it was afterwards omitted, between the eighth and the eleventh centuries, we cannot say.

But in fact, the maniple in that early age had not degenerated from its real and proper purpose,

Accipe manipulum, imple ministerium tuum ; potens est enim Dominus, ~~ut augeat tibi gratiam~~ : qui vivit et regnat.<sup>38</sup>

Pax tecum. Et ille ordinandus respondeat :

Et cum spiritu tuo.

Induat te Dominus vestimento salutis, et indumento justitiæ circumdet te semper.<sup>40</sup>

into a mere ornament: and some ancient pontificals, when the delivery of it first solemnly formed a part of the ordering of subdeacons, expressly referred to its continued and actual use. "Accipe manipulum," was the form of words, "in manibus tuis ad extergendas sordes cordis et corporis, in nomine Patris, etc." Ibid. p. 20. In which form, we find the same mixture of symbolical meaning as in these passages. "Mapula quæ in sinistra parte gestatur, qua pituitam oculorum, et narium detergimus, præsentem vitam designat, in qua superfluos humores patimur." Alcuin. de Div. Off. "Sudarium ad hoc portamus, ut eo detergamus sudorem. In manu sinistra portatur, ut ostendatur, in temporali vita tædium nos pati superflui humoris." Amalarius. Lib. 2. Cap. xxiv.

With regard to the tunic, it seems to be agreed on, that it was introduced after the xiith century: and was first used in the case of those who, being already monks, were to be ordained subdeacons.

<sup>40</sup> "Qua indutus statim legat epistolam, et sequatur kyrie. Deinde vocentur qui ordinandi sunt diaconi." Pontif. Bangor. From this rubric it may be concluded that the tunic was delivered only to the subdeacon about to read the Epistle.

"Tunc lecta epistola cum tractu, injungat psalteria sicut prius, et postea dicat: Recedant qui ordinati sunt subdiaconi: et accedant qui ordinandi sunt diaconi.

"Hic aliqui prælati faciunt simul vocari eos qui ordinandi sunt diaconi et sacerdotes: quibus singillatim vocatis, et introductis, episcopus cum ministris prosternat se ante altare dum quit, in quacumque ordinatione signum hoc salutis adhiberi: 'Crux adest, cum ordinandi statuumur.'" In pontif. Rom. tom. 1. p. 100.

The question however fairly is, not whether the just and proper use of this holy Sign, upon solemn occasions, is to be objected against,—testified to (as it undoubtedly is) by the practice of very early ages, and authorized in the administration of the sacrament of Baptism by the church of England,—but whether it had not come to such an excess, and to be regarded also with superstition, that the wisest if not the only course left to the revisers of our formularies, was to remove it, except upon the occasion of that sacrament alone, entirely from our Offices. I would refer the reader to some further remarks upon this subject, in my work on the Ancient Liturgy: 2nd edit. p. 4. 5. and p. 98.

uero, vel ægro." Ibid. p. 505. The same was repeated in the year 1236, in a provincial constitution: ibid. p. 686.

Lyndwood has a gloss upon this: both with respect to baptizing and hearing confessions. As regards the latter, his explanation is more mysterious than the permission which we are considering. "De baptisate et pœnitentia. Quæ duo quoad ministrationem eorundem purificantur, ut scilicet non ministrantur nisi a sacerdote; qui dictorum sacramentorum est debitus minister, excepta causa necessitatis. De primo, scilicet quoad baptismum, sic scribunt communiter omnes theologi, qui dicunt, quod alius non sacerdos baptizans præter articulum necessitatis peccat. De secundo, scilicet pœnitentia, quod sit proprium officium sacerdotis et non alterius, qui non est sacerdos, patet ex hoc; quod solum sacerdotibus Dominus dedit potestatem ligandi et solvendi." Lib. 3. tit. 24. Baptisterium habeatur. verb. pœnitentia.

The Liber pœnitentialis of archbishop Theodore, in the 7th century, has a notice upon the subject, but expressed in such general terms, that it leaves the question where it was before: "Non licet diaconum laico pœnitentiam judicare, sed episcopi et presbyteri judicare debent."

VOL. III.

Thorpe, Anglo-saxon Laws. Vol. 2. p. 57. But a passage in the 12th epistle of S. Cyprian is much to the point, and possibly it was in reliance upon his authority that the English Church published the above canons. "Quoniam tamen video facultatem veniendi ad vos nondum esse, occurrendum puto fratribus nostris; ut qui libellos a martyribus acceperunt, et prærogativa eorum apud Deum adjuvari possunt, si incommodo aliquo et infirmitatis periculo occupati fuerint, non expectata præsentia nostra, apud presbyterum quemcumque præsentem, vel si presbyter repertus non fuerit, et urgere exitus cœperit, apud diaconum quoque exomologesin facere delicti sui possint; ut manu eis in pœnitentiam imposita veniant ad Dominum cum pace quam dari martyres litteris ad nos factis desideraverunt." Opera. p. 22.

An interpretation may be put upon these canons, as regards confession, that that office, when performed by deacons, came under the class of what was then called Sacramentals; and so possibly the English councils might have looked on it. See Natalis Alexander: Theol. Dogm. Lib. 2. Art. viij. This certainly somewhat reconciles the difficulty under which these canons lie; whether the councils were correct in limiting the power of deacons to baptize, to cases only where great necessity existed, is another point, upon which I have not space to enter. I shall only add, that the later Roman canonists do not allow that the "exomologesis" of S. Cyprian, is to be understood of what they call "sacramental confession:" but a lower kind, which might, in the absence of both priest and bishop, authorize a deacon simply to restore the penitent to the right of communion.

The schoolmen have called these words "Accipe etc." the Form: but there is this difficulty, that (as we have already seen in the case of the Winchester MS.) it is of late introduction; Martene says of about the 13th century: and probably the Bangor pontifical is as early as any manuscript in which it can be found. Hence others, as Catalani, and Martene, say that "the Form" is contained in the prayer which begins "Emitte quæsumus Domine, etc.:" which clause was anciently, as the reader will observe, in the middle, and not at the beginning of a prayer. It was to obviate all these objections, and make the public rituals harmonize with the opinions of the Roman doctors, that at the revision of the pontifical, the old prayer was divided, and the new clause aptly fitted in, to supply what was wanted. Unfortunately, whilst the modern pontifical is sufficiently complete, the testimony of the earlier books remains as firm as ever, against the truth of the new doctrines which, after their time, had been introduced.

Oremus, dilectissimi, Deum Patrem omnipotentem, ut super hos famulos suos, quos ad officium diaconatus assumere dignatus est, benedictionis suæ gratiam clementer effundat, et consecrationis indultæ propitius dona conservet, et preces nostras clementer exaudiat : ut quæ nostro gerenda sunt ministerio, suo benignus prosequatur auxilio, et quos sacris mysteriis exequendis pro nostra intelligentia credimus offerendos, sua electione sanctificet.

"Diaconus cum ordinatur, solus episcopus, qui eum benedicit, manum super caput illius ponat, reliqui omnes sacerdotes juxta manum episcopi, caput illius tangant, quia non ad sacerdotium, sed ad ministerium consecratur." And there is a remarkable place in Durand, where, after citing the first rubric, he objects : "In actibus tamen Apostolorum ita legitur : 'Hos statuerunt ante conspectum Apostolorum, et orantes imposuerunt manus super eos.' In quo ostenditur, non solum episcopum verum etiam presbyteros tunc adstantes debere manum super diaconum, dum ordinatur, imponere." Ration. Lib. 2. ix. 14. And he goes on to argue that a bishop could not have more power than an Apostle. Amalarius also, some centuries before, makes the same objection, upon the same ground. But as Menard argues in his notes on this place of the Sacramentary of S. Gregory, it was not strange, that being together, the Apostles should all have laid their hands upon the deacons : "quamvis id minime esset necessarium, cum unicus sufficere potuisset." Tom. 3. p. 498. I suppose that this point must therefore be left entirely to the discretion of each church, according to her own judgment.

So also we have the canons of councils: thus the 2nd of the 4th council of Arles: "Sed nec reliqui pontifices presbyterii, vel diaconatus honorem conferre præsumant, etc." And the 8th canon of the council of Nice, before quoted (p. 145. Note 6); "ὁ δὲ ονομαζόμενος παρα τοῖς λεγομένοις Καθηραῖς ἐπισκοπος, τὴν τοῦ πρεσβυτερίου τιμὴν ἔξει."

“ Commune votum communis prosequatur oratio, ut hii totius ecclesiæ prece, qui in diaconatus ministerium præparantur, levitica benedictione et spiritali conversatione præfulgentes, gratia sanctificationis eluceant. Per eum qui vivit.

An exhortation similar to the last, (“ Commune votum,”) is still used in the Roman pontifical : but placed at the beginning, immediately after the admonition to the deacons. I take the opportunity of noting this, and of reminding the student of the numberless variations which existed between the old English uses and the Roman. This last he must carefully examine for himself.

“ Neither the “ Pax tecum” nor its response, is ordered in the Bangor or Exeter MSS.

“ The modern Roman pontifical delivers the dalmatic before the book of the Gospels. This rite of delivering the Gospels, was for many ages peculiar to the English Church : nor is it mentioned by any of the early ritualists, S. Isidore, Amalarius, or Alcuin. Martene says that it is not to be found in any pontifical before the 10th century, those of English use alone excepted : and he continues, “ Cum ergo solemniter fuerit in Anglia evangelii traditio, reperiatque in omnibus, quos inde viderimus libris ritualibus, ab ea ecclesia hunc ritum initium traxisse facile colligitur.”

Catalani (Comment. in pontif. Tom. 1. p. 119.) rather hastily accuses Martene of an error in this statement, referring to the old Ordo Romanus, printed by Hittorpius, for a similar direction as to the book of the Gospels, to be delivered to the deacons. But in fact, that Ordo does not mention the Gospels : neither in the edition by Hittorpius himself, in 1568 ; nor in the first vol. of the “ Auctarium” to the Bibl. Patrum. Even if some other Ordo Romanus might give such a direction, it would yet remain to be proved that it was of an earlier date than the ixth century : for there is no doubt, that about that time, it was introduced into the churches of France, and from thence would rapidly pass over into Italy.

But it seems best, upon a point of so much interest, to give the

" Papa transit ei episcopus sacrum evangelium dicens: Accipe illud volumen evangelii. Lega et intellige et alius trade, et tu opere adimple."

In the same age, and very possibly derived from the same British source, there was another remarkable rite observed in the English Church, as is proved by the same pontificals, in the ordination of deacons: this was the anointing of the hands. After the benediction we have the following rubric, and Form. "Consecratio manuum diaconi de oleo atque chrismate. Consecrantur manus istæ, quæsumus Domine, et sanctificentur, per istam sanctam unctionem nostramque benedictionem, ut quæcumque benedixerint, benedicta sint; et quæcumque sanctificaverint, sanctificata sint. Per."

There is evidence that this rite also was for a short time adopted from England into France: as appears from a letter of Pope Nicolas I. to an archbishop in that country: "Præterea sciscitaris utrum solis presbyteris an diaconibus debeant, cum ordinantur, manus chrismatis liquore perungi." Conc. Gall. Tom. 3. <sup>67</sup> As above, (Note 47.) it was observed that the tunic was of late introduction in the ordination of subdeacons, so the dalmatic was also adopted, first in the case of monks, about the 12th century. The Winchester pontifical does not notice it, as the student will see in the note below: and the English churches probably admitted it into their ordinals, early in the 13th century, as it is ordered in the Bangor MS.

Paul: and the allusion to his own ordination. The imposition of the hands of the attendant priests, together with the bishop's, is thus to be traced to the primitive and apostolic ages; but not as an essential rite: never having been considered in any other respect than as adding to the solemnity of the ordination, and as a mark of reception into the sacred brotherhood of priests.

It has been asked, however, with regard to the imposition of hands by the bishop, why this is necessary, having already been observed in the ordination to the diaconate. Catalani (Comment. in pontif. Tom. 1. p. 130) says this is an ancient difficulty, and we certainly find it met not only by Durand, but by Amalarius as early as the 9th century: I quote the answer of this last author, who, it may be remarked, is followed by Durand (Lib. 2. ix. 15) almost word for word. "Quare hoc? nisi quia per consecrationem de opere ad opus transit, sicut de ministerio diaconi transit ad immolationem sacerdotalem. Quoniam nec illud opus, nec illud possumus agere, nisi dono gratiæ Dei adjuti, ut ait apostolus. Repetitur manus impositio, ac sic deprecatio primi operis transit ad deprecationem secundi." De ecc. off. Lib. 2. cap. 12.

Exaudi nos, quæsumus Domine, Deus noster, et super hos famulos tuos benedictionem Sancti Spiritus, et gratiæ spiritualis<sup>78</sup> effunde virtutem : ut quos tuæ pietatis aspectibus offerimus consecrandos, perpetua muneris tui largitate prosequaris : non terminando secreta : Per Dominum nostrum, Jesum Christum, Filium tuum, qui tecum vivit et regnat in unitate.

Dignum et justum est.

Vere dignum et justum est, æquum et salutare, nos tibi semper et ubique gratias agere, Domine sancte, Pater omnipotens, æternæ Deus : Honorum dator, et distributor omnium dignitatum, per quem proficiunt universa, per quem cuncta firmantur, amplificatis semper in melius naturæ rationalis incrementis, per ordinem congrua ratione dispositum. Unde et sacerdotales gradus, atque officia levitarum, sacramentis mysticis instituta creverunt, ut cum pontifices summos regendis populis præfecisses, ad eorum societatis et operis adjumentum, sequentis ordinis viros et secundæ dignitatis eligeres. multitudines facile gubernavit. Sic et in Eleazarum et Ithamar filios Aaron, paternæ plenitudinis abundantiam transfudisti; ut ad hostias salutare et frequentioris officii sacramenta, ministerium sufficeret sacerdotum: hac providentia, Domine, apostolis Filii tui doctores fidei comites addidisti; quibus illi orbem totum secundis prædicationibus impleverunt. Quapropter infirmitati quoque nostræ, Domine quæsumus, hæc adjumenta largire, qui quanto fragiliores sumus, tanto his pluribus indigemus. Da, quæsumus omnipotens Deus, in hos famulos tuos presbyterii dignitatem, et innova in visceribus eorum spiritum sanctitatis, ut acceptum a te, Deus, secundi meriti munus obtineant, censuramque morum exemplo suæ conversationis insinuent. Sint providi<sup>79</sup> cooperatores ordinis nostri, et eluceat in eis totius forma justitiæ, ut bonam rationem dispensationis sibi creditæ reddituri, æternæ beatitudinis præmia consequantur: terminando secreta :

Per eundem Dominum. In unitate ejusdem.

nens super dexterum humerum, aptat eam ante pectus, in modum crucis."

The stole, in the ordination of priests, is not noticed in the Gregorian sacramentary, or in other of the early pontificals of foreign churches: and Martene's conjecture is probably correct, that it was considered unnecessary to repeat this rite. But it would seem that in this case also we have another remnant of the primitive Use of the British Church: for in those very ancient pontificals of Egbert and S. Dunstan, which I before spoke of, we find the stole appointed to be delivered again to priests: and it must be remembered that these MSS. carry us up to almost the time when the first Saxons were converted, and communion again sought for with the British Church. The first rubric in those pontificals, is:

On account of the importance of it, and the great authority of these English pontificals, I extract here also the rest of this rubric: “ Et ibidem tituletur specialiter ad qualem ecclesiam debeat ministrare, et benedicente eum episcopo, manum super caput ejus ponat. Similiter et presbyteri, qui præsentes sunt, manus suas juxta manum episcopi super caput illius teneant et componant.”

But to return to the stole: it was not long before the custom of the English Church was introduced into France, and from thence probably into other countries. For we find the stole recognized as a peculiar part of a priest's vestments, as early as the beginning of the 9th century; and this, not only when engaged in the performance of his duties, but as a distinction to be attached to his constant dress: and it would naturally follow, that a solemn investiture should form a part of the solemnities of ordination. Thus we have these canons: (cited by Martene, Tom. 2. p. 23.) “ Presbyteri sine intermissione utantur orario propter differentiam sacerdotii dignitatis.” Conc. Mogunt. can. 28. A.D. 813. “ Presbyteri non vadant nisi stola vel orario induti.” Conc. Tribur. can. 26. And John of Salisbury tell us, in his life of Thomas a Becket, “ stolam jugum Christi suave circa collium diebus ac noctibus habebat.”

That this was the general symbolical meaning of the stole, is clear from many writers. Alcuin says: “ Orarium, id est, stola, dicitur eo quod oratoribus, id est, prædicatoribus concedatur. Admonet illum, qui illo induitur, ut memor sit, sub jugo Christi, quod leve et suave est, esse se constitutum.” Cap. “ Quid significant vestimenta.” Edit. Hittorpius. p. 77. Again, Amalarius: *“ Per stolam designatur onus leve ac suave, de quo Dominus dicit: Tollite jugum meum, etc. Per jugum, evangelium intelligimus. — In eo quod stola ad genua tendit, quæ solent curvari causa humilitatis, hoc intelligimus, quod Dominus dicit: Discite a me, quia mitis sum et humilis corde. posita collo, ministrum evangelii esse, non præpositum." De ecc. off. Lib. 2. Cap. 20. To the same purpose also, Durand, in his Rationale, Lib. 3. Cap. 5: whom it is unnecessary to quote: except this sentence: "stola ab humero sinistro sacerdotis in dextrum dum ordinatur, reflectitur, quia cum obedientia incipiat ab activa per dilectionem proximi, transit in contemplativam vitam per dilectionem Dei." §. 3. But the reader who wishes to discover more of the mystical significations of the stole, and other ecclesiastical vestments, will find enough to repay (?) his labour in this third book of Durand.

<sup>83</sup> In the Dunstan and other earliest English Pontificals, the chasuble was not put on until after the anointing had been completed. The following, in some MSS., are the rubric and form of words: "Et induat casula, et dicit episcopus: Per hæc indumenta stolam et casulam salutis indui merearis æternæ perpetuitatis plenitudinem, cum sanctis sacerdotibus Christo ministrantibus: ut præmia feliciter capessere valeas repromissa. Hymno dicto sedeat episcopus, sicut prius, et perungat oleo sancto chrismate mixto in patena, manus cujuslibet sacerdotis ordinandi, a pollice dextro ad indicem manus sinistrae: deinde ab indice dextro ad pollicem sinistram, dicens: Consecrare et sanctificare, etc.” *Pontif. The Bangor MS. after the hymn “Veni Creator,” directs:

it would appear that it was introduced into this part of the offices of the Western Church late in the xith century. The earliest MS. in which it has been found, is (I believe) a pontifical “ad usum ecclesie Suessionensis,” of about that date, and from which Martene has printed his “vij. ordo.” Tom. 2. p. 50. That manuscript seems to have been remarkably deficient in rubrics, but after the form “Consecrare” is added “Veni Creator Spiritus.”

* I have spoken somewhat already in the preliminary dissertation upon the rite of unction. Here I shall observe that the earlier practice of the English Church, as shewn by the pontificals of Egbert and Dunstan, was to anoint the head also: the order of the first is: "Consecratio manus: Benedic, Domine, et sanctifica has manus, etc. Faciens crucem sanctam de chrismate in manibus ejus, dicit: Consecratur manus istæ: etc. Consecratio capitis oleo: Unguatur et consecratur caput tuum celesti benedictione in ordine sacerdotali, in nomine Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus Sancti. Amen. Pax tibi. Et cum spiritu tuo." With which in that MS. the ordination of priests concludes. The Dunstan pontifical, as I have just said, also anoints the head, with the same form of words: but it omits the rubric as to the sign of the cross, and proceeds afterwards to direct the investing with the chasuble, and some other prayers. From the omission of all notice of this rite in the Winchester pontifical, we may conclude that it was omitted by the English Church about the 10th or 11th century.*

In the same way with the other, if I may so say, primitive customs of the English Church, above spoken of, this rite also seems to have been introduced for a time into some of the churches of France. Two early MSS. (of about the 9th century,) are shewn belonged to Archbishop Thomas à Becket, really was his: for in that also, the same rite is ordered.

annulo sedeat, et expansa toballia super genua accipiat oleum sanctum, cui miscetur chrisma, pro eo quod in consecratione chrismatis fit mentio de ordinibus ecclesiasticis per ipsum perficiendis: scilicet, quando episcopus incipit, Consecrare et sanctificare digneris, Domine Deus, manus istas, faciat cruces singulas ad illa duo verba, super manus sacerdotis, et intingat pollicem manus dexteræ suæ in oleo et chrismate commixtis super patenam in bombace seu cotone; dicendo hæc verba, Per istam unctionem, faciat crucem super manus sacerdotis cum dicto oleo et chrismate, et ungendos incipiendo crucem unctionis intra manus sacerdotis a principio pollicis manus dexteræ presbyteri, usque ad finem manus sinistrae indicis sacerdotis. Item incipiendo in secunda unctione, complendo crucem a principio indicis manus dexteræ presbyteri usque ad finem pollicis manus sinistrae.

<sup>91</sup> The student will find some observations on this part of the office in Martene and Morinus, to which I must refer him: and merely remind him, that no mention of this rite is made in the English pontificals, before the 11th century. Nor is it to be found in the early sacramentaries of Gelasius, or Gregory: or in the often quoted canons of the 14th Carthaginian council.

“ I must remind the student, that the whole of the office of the mass, including the secrets, and the canon, is now said in the Roman Church, so that the newly ordained priests may hear: not as is usual, in a tone so low, that none can hear except the priest who celebrates. The modern pontifical has a rubric to this express effect: “Secretas morose dicat, ut ordinandi ad sacerdotium possint illas cum eo dicere, debent enim ex consuetudine celebrare, et etiam verba consecrationis proferre.” I mention this, because the points involved in this practice, though it be an exception, are of very high importance: more especially, the repetition, by all, of the words of Consecration. There is moreover evidence, that in the early ages, priests not only at their ordination, but at other times, and throughout the Christian world, celebrated the Divine Service tosufficient presbyteris ordinandis ad communicandum.<sup>94</sup>

gether with the Bishop. See Morinus de sacr. ordin. Part. iij. Dissert. 8. Cap. 1. Catalani, in Pontif. Rom. Tom. 1. p. 46. and Martene. Tom. 2. p. 24.

The chief point, as I need scarcely remind the student, involved in this matter, is its bearing upon the question of the consecration of the sacred elements, by the mere repetition of the words of Institution. I must refer him to my Preface to the Ancient Liturgy, (p. c. et seqq. : 2nd Edit.) where he will find this subject discussed. There can be no doubt that both in the Eastern and Western Churches, the practice of "concelebration," as I have stated above, was on certain occasions allowed; nor are any difficulties involved in it, until we are asked to consent to that novel figment, that by the mere words of Institution only, and by them alone, the Holy Eucharist is consecrated. Then certainly, steps in this question: one, which the Roman doctors see the force of, but fail to explain: the doubt is this; (I use the words of Catalani) "An presbytero cum episcopo concelebranti adscribi debeat consecratio, si ante episcopum verba consecrationis protulerit?" In pontif. Rom. Comment. Tom. 1. p. 142. He answers it, by making the whole effect depend upon Intention: and cites Pope Innocent III. whose words are: "Sane dici, et responderi probabiliter potest, quod sive prius, sive posterius proferant sacerdotes, referri debet eorum intentio ad instar prolationis episcopi, cui concelebrant." Lib. IV. de mysteriis missæ. It will be observed that the pope speaks doubtfully: and as Catalani is himself obliged to allow, many great writers attempted to get rid of the difficulty, by proposing the entire abrogation of the custom: or at least, that the words of Institution should be repeated by the celebrant alone. Among these were Durand (in IV. Distinct. xij. Quest. iij.,) who plainly says that Innocent decides "ut doctor, et non ut papa:"—Cajetan in iij. part. S. Thomæ. Quest. lxxxij. and Gabriel Biel, in Canon Missæ: lect. vj. To these may also be added Morinus, who declares that the general practice once allowed had very properly been restricted, "præsertim cum mos ille fuerit doctoribus scholasticis innumerarum difficultatum seges amplissima, nonnullis asserentibus hoc fieri posse, aliis negantibus, aliis certos quosdam possibilitatis modos et terminos excogitantibus; omnibus deinde ut sese ab adversariorum telis

<sup>94</sup> After the Cup was denied to the laity, and to all in fact except the officiating priest, for some time it was usual at ordinations to communicate all who had been ordained, in both kinds. Thus a pontifical cited by Martene directs the communion to be given: and the next restriction seems to have been, that in both kinds was to be allowed only when the Pope himself ordained. I think it well to quote this from a MS. Roman pontifical in the Colbertine library, as printed by Martene, Tom. 2. p. 85.

*" Post communionem vero pontificis, ante perfusionem, ordinati flexis genibus, facta confessione, et osculata dextra pontificis, sacram communionem recipiunt de manu pontificis, recipiendo osculum pacis ab eo, scilicet presbyteri et diaconi: sanguinem autem recipient de manu diaconi qui cantavit euangelium, et redeunt ad loca sua circa altare. <sup>98</sup> We cannot conclude from this obscure rubric, whether the communion was to be administered in one, or in both kinds.

Exultavit ut gigas ad currendam viam: a summo cælo egressio ejus, et occursus ejus usque ad summum ejus.

Accipe Spiritum Sanctum: quorum remiseris pec-

which was probably nevertheless observed, of kissing the hand of the bishop, before communion. The modern pontifical of the Church of Rome has inserted a rubric to that effect, and Durand in his Rationale speaks of it as the common practice in his time. Lib. 2. Cap. x. But with this difference; and it would be curious to discover whether such was the practice continued in the Church of England: viz.: that the bishop kissed each newly ordained priest, but the others, deacons, &c., kissed the bishop's hand. And the reason he gives for this, is important, and will excuse, I trust, the length of this note. "Quia pontifex osculando sacerdotem denotat, quod ille ad æqualitatem Ordinis recipitur, quantum ad sacramentum Eucharistiæ consecrandum, quod est sacramentum amoris, quod per osculum significatur. Diaconus vero, et subdiaconus non recipiuntur ad talem æqualitatem, sed ad imitationem bonæ operationis, etc."

Roman pontifical has inserted this rubric. "Incepto responsorio, pontifex, accepta mitra, vertit se ad presbyteros ordinatos, qui ante altare coram ipso stantes profitentur fidem, quam prædicaturi sunt dicentes: Credo in Deum. etc." This does not appear to be an improper addition to the old office, although the reason why it should have been placed here, is not very obvious. There is no ancient authority whatever for its introduction, except one pontifical of the 13th century, cited by Catalani, (Comment. in Pontif. Rom. Tom. 1. p. 148.) in which the Creed is ordered to be said, before the ordination service commenced. But there is a canon of the eleventh council of Toledo: "Ut unusquisque qui ad ecclesiasticos gradus est accessurus, non ante honorem consecrationis accipiat, quam placiti sui innodatione promittat, ut fidem catholicam sincera cordis devotione custodiens, juste et pie vivere debeat, et ut in nullis operibus suis, canonicis regulis contradicat." Concil. Mansi. Tom. xi. col. 143.

<sup>1</sup> This very important part of the office of ordination of priests, is, comparatively, of late introduction. I doubt whether any example of it is to be discovered earlier than the xijth century: and although it had been adopted into the use of the Church of Bangor, before the end of the next century, we have no trace of it in the Winchester pontifical. All the great ritualists have failed, and acknowledge it, in their search after earlier authority. Martene has cited an undoubtedly very remarkable passage, from the life of a bishop of Cambrai, who lived in the 10th century: where the writer is speaking of that bishop being ordained priest, and among other circumstances remarks; "Cumque ad manus impositionem pontificalis diceretur novo presbytero, 'Accipe Spiritum Sanctum, quorum remiseras peccata, etc.'" Martene's most just criticism is: "Verum quid unicum testimonium tot pontificalibus libris opponendum?" Tom. 2. p. 23.

For all the early pontificals omit this second imposition of hands: and explicit delivery of the power to remit or retain sins. It is not in the early English MSS. of Egbert or Dunstan, or the Winchester Use: it is not in any of the foreign Orders, printed by Martene, before the 12th century: it is not in the old Sacramentaries of S. Gregory, or Gelasius: nor, lastly, does one of the ancient ritualists, Isidore, or Amalarius, or Strabo, Alcuin, Micrologus, or Ivo Carnotensis, allude to it in the most distant terms.

With regard to the controversialists of the Roman Church, this fact places them in a considerable difficulty: and really I cannot help observing, how very numerous the difficulties are which an appeal even to the documents of "the dark ages," (not to say, the primitive ages,) thrusts them into. Because, unhappily, the Tridentine Council has authoritatively declared: "Si quis dixerit, per sacram ordinationem non dari Spiritum Sanctum; ac proinde, frustra episcopos dicere, 'Accipe Spiritum Sanctum;'—anathema sit." Sess. 23. Canon. IV. Bellarmin does not shrink from the undeniable conclusion which must be drawn from this canon: (the reader will not forget that the first imposition of hands was given in silence; see above, p. 204.) and he plainly says: "Concilium declarat, tunc ordinari presbyteros, et tunc dari illis gratiam Spiritus Sancti, cum eis dicitur: Accipite Spiritum Sanctum. At cum hoc dicitur, manus impo-nuntur, ut patet ex pontificali, et ecclesiæ consuetudine; ergo sentiebat concilium, illam impositionem manus esse de essentia."

Opera. Tom. 3. p. 613. De Sacr. Ord. Lib. 1. Cap. ix. Goar takes the same view. Euchol. p. 279. note 11. It is not necessary to quote other writers to the same effect: because in this case, it is not what a single doctor, or ten doctors have said, but what the Council of Trent has not feared seemingly to set its seal to: namely, this: that for 1000 years the service for the ordination of priests wanted an essential part.

The true explanation is, that, there being inherent in the priestly office, power over both the mystical and the eucharistical body of Christ, power, that is, to consecrate the sacred elements of Bread and Wine, and power to rule and to absolve the living members of the Church militant, this power was given entirely and at once, by the single and first imposition of hands. It was very wise in the revisers of our ordinal not to omit this lately added clause, "Whose sins thou dost forgive, they are forgiven; and whose sins thou dost retain, they are retained:" but it was still more wise and accordant with all ancient precedent both of opinion and practice, by uniting the two

Also in the modern Roman use, there here follows, as in our own ordinal in another place, an oath or promise of canonical obedience. The rubric is "Et mox unusquisque iterum ad pontificem accedit, et genuflexus ponit manus suas junctas inter manus pontificis dicentis cuiuslibet, si suus est ordinarius, Promittis mihi, et successoribus meis reverentiam et obedientiam? et ille respondet: Promitto." Both Martene and Catalani agree in the fact that this is a ceremony of late introduction, at least in this place, after communion. But for the act of promising obedience, by the priest to his bishop, at some time before, and generally immediately before, the rite itself of ordination, we have sufficient evidence. And the present ordinal of the Church of England, in this matter also, has returned to a most admonition can be traced earlier than to the 13th century. Still there are many evidences which shew that the practice of diligently learning the duties of their office, before actually entering upon them, was common long before. Nor could the necessity of it be light, when we remember the intricacy and multitude of the rubrics which the newly ordained priests were to observe.

<sup>8</sup> None of the early pontificals, or the ancient sacramentaries, have any notice to this effect; it is therefore of late introduction. The utmost, which appears in any of them to lead to it, is a simple and religious request by the bishop that the newly ordained should pray for him. But these directions to say certain prayers, psalms, or masses, which as the reader has seen, has been divided in the office in our text, into several admonitions by the archdeacon to each degree in the ministry, have been collected by the modern Roman pontifical, into one set form, to be solemnly pronounced by the bishop, after the postcommunion, and the blessing. I think it right to extract it, bearing, as it does, on much that has gone before.

" Singuli ad primam tonsuram, vel ad quatuor minores ordines promoti, dicite semel psalmos pœnitentiales, cum litanis, versiculis, et orationibus. Salisbury, the appointed form.
The student should refer to "*the

p. 136. note 20. And here I would again remind him, that all these parts of the text, which were in the communion service of the day, the collects, gradual, verses, secrets, &c., would also change according to the proper requirements of the season at which the ordinations took place.

<sup>11</sup> This washing of the hands of the priests, is directed to be one according to the modern use of the Church of Rome, in the middle of the office. "In-erea dum offertorium cantatur, vel etiam prius, ordinati sacerdotes poterunt lavare manus suas cum medulla panis, et aqua bene mundare, atque extergere mapulis illis, quibus ligatæ erant, et aqua ablutionis hujusmodi projiciatur in sacrarium." Rubr. Pontif. Rom. No direction to this effect is to be found in the early pontificals, and it was introduced, as a consequence of the extreme reverence which began in the middle ages to be paid to the consecrated oil, whether chrism or not, which was used in the unction. To the same purpose, were the careful directions, which were so frequently repeated as to the unction at confirmation; see Vol. 1. p. ccxiv: and above, as to coronations, p. 24.

<sup>12</sup> That is, at the other Ember days, or seasons of general ordinations. The Salisbury pontifical, from which the text is taken, contains, which is not the case with all pontificals, the variations of lections, epistles, gospels, collects, &c., according to the different times of the year. Each of them, as it occurs in its place in the manuscript, referring back to this office of the Ember-day in Advent, for those portions of it which related to the ordination itself, and were unchangeable.

atem assumi intelligat, et quia inter ipsum et Deum velamen desuper nullum esse debeat, sed revelata facie, secundum apostolum, Domini sui gloriam contempletur. Clericus enim non sicut laici secretorum Dei gnarus esse debet, quia nuntius ejus est ad laicum populum. Unde et usque ad apertionem oculorum et aurium amoventur crines quasi superflui, ut eum ab audiendo et intelligendo verbo Dei occupatio sæcularis, et terrena ambitio non impediat. Extunc vero debet ecclesiæ stipendiis sustentari, et Scriptura Sacra instrui, et in officio ecclesiastico institui: ut cum ratio poposcerit, et ætas, ac scientia, et mores suppetunt, ad ordines sacros assumi possit sub titulo certo, sine quo non sunt ordinandi, ne potius acephali quam clerici efficiantur. Hujus tonsuræ ritus ex veteri Testamento a Nazareis, ut dicitur, sumpsit exordium, quoniam crines diu crescentes, ob vitæ continentiam tandem rasos in ignem sacrificii, consumebant. Sed et in Actibus Apostolorum, Priscillam et Aquilam, atque beatum Paulum, et quosdam alios, idem fecisse legimus, significando in corde et opere pullulantia vitia præcidenda.

OSTIARII in veteri Testamento janitores dicebantur. Quorum officium est claves ecclesiæ custodire, et competentibus horis claudere et aperire, et quæ intus sunt custodire, fideles Christianos recipere, excommunicatos vero et infideles excludere, sicut patet partim ex verbis episcopi ordinantis. Hoc officium Christus per se ipsum exercuit et constituit, quando ementes et vendentes in templo, per quos omnes hæretici et infideles figurantur, cum flagello de funiculis ejecit de templo.

poribus obsessis ejiciant. Habent etiam facere in catechumenis officium apertionis. Hi in ordine et officio ecclesiæ constituti sunt secundum hoc, quod in templo Salamonis dispositi erant primo, sed postea ab Esdra distinctius ordinati. Hoc officium exercuit et instituit Dominus, quando cum saliva sua tetigit aures et linguam surdi et muti, dicens, Ephphatha, quod est, adaperire; docens nos per hoc spiritualiter aperire aures et ora cordium, ad recte intelligendum et confitendum Christum. Hoc etiam officium exercuit sæpius, sed specialiter expellendo septem dæmonia de Magdalena.

ACOLYTI Græce, ceroferarii dicuntur Latine. Qui dum evangelium legitur, vel sacrificium offertur, vel cæterum ministerium sacrum perficitur, cereos accensos deferunt, non ut hujus aeris tenebras illuminent, sed ut spiritualiter lucis opera proximis ostendant, et errantibus more lucis ducatum præsent. Accipiunt et urceolum vacuum de manu episcopi, quia nondum digni sunt tenere plenum; in signum quod vasa templi tangere quidem possunt, sed nondum perfecti sunt ad sacri ordinis officium ministrandum. Hoc officium se habere testatur Dominus, dicens, 'Ego sum lux mundi. Qui sequitur me non ambulat in tenebris, sed habebit lumen vitæ.'

tionem sui, significatur operum perfectio. Hic ordo in veteri Testamento a tribu Levi habet exordium. Præcepit enim Dominus Moysi; ut post ordinationem Aaron et filiorum ejus, rursus tribus Levi ad divini cultus ministeria ordinaretur et consecraretur Domino, et servirent pro Israel, coram Aaron et filiis ejus, in tabernaculo Dei. Ipsique gestarent arcam et tabernaculum, et omnia vasa ejus, et in circuitu tabernaculi castra constituerent, et in transportando tabernaculo ipsi deponerent. A viginti autem annis et supra, jussi sunt servire in tabernaculo. Quam regulam sancti patres et in novo Testamento constituerunt, quoniam hæc ætas ad portanda onera robusta est, quod illi ordini a Moyse institutum est. Quod et in novo Testamento representatur, cum diaconibus supra sinistrum humerum stola imponitur, et casula in diebus jejunii supra eundem humerum complicatur, quia quicquid laboris et sustententiæ in hac vita toleramus, tanquam in sinistra portamus, donec in dextra, hoc est, in æternitate, requiem habeamus. Hic ordo in novo Testamento ab Apostolis sumpsit initium, quando, sicut legitur in Actibus Apostolorum, septem viros boni testimonii, plenos Spiritu Sancto, ad hoc elegerunt officium. Et oratione præmissa, manus eis imposuerunt. Et exinde Apostoli, et eorum successores, decreverunt ut in omni matrice ecclesia septem diacones circa aram Christi sublimiori gradu, tanquam columnæ altaris, assisterent, non sine aliquo septenarii mysterio. In quo figuratur, ut septiformis gratiæ spiritu fulgentes, sancti sunt corpore ac spiritu. Hi sunt septem angeli in Apocalypsi tuba canentes. Hi sunt septem candelabra aurea. Hi voces tonitruorum. Ipsi enim clara voce, in modum præconis, admonent cunctos sive ad orandum, sive ad genua flectenda, sive ad psallendum, sive

TERTIA. HOC EST SACRAMENTUM MORTUORUM COMMUNIO. Cuius gratia
 Sicut scriptis invenitur, et hinc sanctorum vita immortalita. www.libriol.com.cn Hinc etiam hoc tenent inter pontificem et iugis temporis sacerdotem, quod saltem purificatione anima est corporum eruditione, humilitatem devotio, sancti circumspectis consecratio, mane impositio, et communis super populum benedictio. In aliis autem sacramentis, sive catechizandi, sive baptizandi, sive missam celebrandi, et consecrandi corporis et sanguinis Christi, sive in ecclesia verbum faciendi, communis est iurisque dis-pensatio. Summis ergo sacerdotibus supra dicta idcirco singulariter reservata sunt: ne eadem prorsus auctoriritas potestatis, ab omnibus passim vendicata, inferiores erga superiores insolentes redderet, et soluto obedi-entiae vinculo, scandalum generaret. Presbyteri successores et vicarii sunt septuaginta discipulorum, qui precedebant Dominum Jesum in omnem civitatem, et locum quo ipse erat venturus. Ita quippe presbyteri, qui adjutores sunt episcoporum, rudes populos catechi-zando initiant, baptizando unitati ecclesiae incorporant, ut in omnibus sacramentis usque ad manus impositionem populo Dei ministrant. Episcopi vero successores sunt apostolorum, qui ex necessitate adiutorium et sup-plementum sui officii, in tanta multitudine populorum rogendorum, ministerium sibi expetunt sacerdotum, sicut Moyses in eremo septuaginta viros elegit pru-dentes, quorum consilio et auxilio, multitudinem tantam facilius gubernaret. Sive ergo inferioris sive supe-rioris sint ordinis sacerdotes, id est, sive presbyteri, sive episcopi, vicem gerunt summi pontificis, dum po-pulos delinquentes ad poenitentiam vocant, et oratio-num suarum medicamento sanant, unde dicit apostolus, Deus erat in Christo mundum reconcilians sibi, et posuit in nobis verbum reconciliationis. Obsecramus ergo pro Christo, reconciliamini Deo. In hoc igitur vice mediatoris funguntur sacerdotes, quod Deum pro peccatis populi exorant, et pœnitentes absolvendo Deo reconciliant. Quapropter convenit ut tanquam boni mediatores inter homines et Deum, et præcepta Dei ad populum deferant, veritatem prædicando, et preces populi Deo offerant, pro peccatoribus intercedendo. Mediator autem, ut ait apostolus, unius non est, quia discordes reconciliare non potest, qui utrumque societatis pace et amicitiae vinculo consors non est. Et idcirco sacerdotes cum Deo pacem habere, per eminentiam sanctitatis, et cum proximis concordiam servare debent, per affectum compassionis. Quales ergo debeant esse presbyteri, apostolus scribens ad Titum insinuat, dicens, Hujus rei gratia reliqui te Crete, ut constituas per civitates presbyteros, quemadmodum tibi disposui. Siquis sine crimine est, unius uxoris virum, habentem filios fideles, non in accusatione luxuriæ, aut non subditus. Oportet enim episcopum sine crimine esse. Qua sententia ostendit etiam presbyteros sub episcoporum nomine taxari. Unde ad Timotheum de ordinatione episcopi et diaconi scribit, de presbyteris tacens, quos sub nomine episcoporum intelligendos relinquit. Quapropter tales etiam in ecclesia presbyteros constituendos esse sicut episcopos, et apostolus asserit, et canones apostolicam auctoritatem secuti testantur. Presbyteri cum ordinantur, episcopo eos benedicente, et manus super capita eorum tenente, omnes presbyteri qui præsentibus sunt, manus juxta manus episcopi, super capita eorum levant, et Spiritum Sanctum super eos qui ordinantur, invocant. Unguntur presbyteris manus sicut episcopis, ut cognoscant se hoc sacramento gratiam consecrandi accipere, et opera misericordiae pro viribus exercere debere erga omnes.

Decretum de electo Episcopo.

"Exsurge, Domine, adjuva nos.

"Dominus vobiscum. Et cum. Oremus.

"Concede, quæsumus, omnipotens Deus, ut famulum tuum, quem

ad regimen animarum eligimus, gratiæ tuæ dono prosequaris, ut, te largiente, cum ipsa tibi nostra electione placeamus. Per Christum Dominum nostrum."

Immediately preceding the "decretum," there is a short form, which I subjoin.

"Quæ episcopus, in consecratione sua, profitetur se observaturum.

*"Omnem prudentiam, quantum natura sua capax est, divinæ scripturæ sensibus accommodare. Ea, quæ ex divinis scripturis intelligit, plebi cui ordinatus est verbo docere et exemplo. ## Consecratio electi in Episcopum.

PROVIDEAT electus cum suis, quod mane diei dominicæ, parata sint et in promptu omnia sibi necessaria in consecratione, videlicet, caligæ, sandalia, amictus, alba, cingulum, stola, manipulus, tunicella, dalmatica, planeta, et cuculliale albi coloris, chirothecæ, annulus pontificalis, et alius annulus parvus, mitra, baculus pastoralis, duo bacilia, tobalia pro manibus tergendis, tobalia ad ponendum coram consecratore, tobalia et pecten ad pectinandum,<sup>1</sup> micæ panis ad tergendum manus et caput, duo brachia telæ de cortina<sup>2</sup> ad circumligandum caput in unctione, duo magni panes involuti duobus toballiis, duæ magnæ phialæ plenæ vino, et duo magna torticia ad offerendum, libri missalis et pontificalis, faldistorium et

<sup>1</sup> Ducange says: "Pecten, inter ministeria sacra recensetur, quo scilicet sacerdotes ac clerici antequam in ecclesiam procederent, crines pecterent." And he cites several examples, proving that a comb was among the ordinary furniture of chapels. In the earlier pontificals there is no express mention of it, although it is clear that in Durand's time, the use of it was general; Rationale, lib. 4. cap. 3: and Ducange quotes a will of a bishop in the 10th century, who, among other effects, specifies, "Pectinem eburneam unam."

So in the old inventories we find them mentioned; thus, in that of S. Paul's, A. D. 1295: "Tres pectines eburnei, spissi et magni, et tres tenues et usuales de ebore. Item, unum pecten eburneum pulchrum. Item, duo pectines eburnei sufficientes." Dugdale. S. Paul's, p. 206.

242 Consecratio electi in episcopum.

Inc. p. 3 consecratio electi in episcopum, quæ est agenda die dominica, et non in alia festivitate, antequam missa celebretur.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> After the "Decretum," the Winchester and Bangor MSS. pass on to the order of consecration, omitting the rubric in the text, as to the necessities to be provided. The first rubric of those books is as follows:

"Tempus examinatio ordinandi episcopi, quæ est agenda die dominica, antequam missa celebretur." Pontif. Winton.

"Incipit examinatio ordinandi episcopi, quæ est agenda die dominica, antequam celebretur. [sic.] Ipse electus sacerdotalibus vestibus induatur præter casulam, et pro casula induatur capa. Et sic comprovinciales episcopi deducant eum per manus coram metropolitano examinandum: ipse metropolitano sedente in loco examinationis, dorso verso ad majus altare. Sedilia vero episcoporum coram metropolitano in modum coronæ, a dextris et a sinistris electi. Tunc dicat metropolitanius:

As before stated, the Exeter MS. does not contain the "decreeum," nor has it the rubric regarding the necessary preparations: its first rubric, after the commencement, is similar to that of the Bangor Use: but it begins thus:

ad Hugo S. Victor: "Presbyteri et diaconi sabbato consecrandi episcopo præsentantur; benedictiones vero pontificum diebus tantum dominicis celebrandas esse, veteri canones sanxerunt." De sacror. lib. 2. ij. 20.

"But the rubric now of the Roman pontifical is this: "Statuta die consecrationis, quæ debet esse dominica, vel natalitium apostolorum, vel etiam festiva, si summus pontifex hoc specialiter indulserit."

<sup>5</sup> Mabillon has printed in his Analecta, from a manuscript of the 11th century, a "ritus ordinandi episcopi," which was observed anciently in the church of Rouen. On account not only of this Order throwing much light on many of the particulars which will follow in the text, but of the frequent intercourse in that age kept between the churches of Normandy and England, I shall transcribe the first rubric of that MS.

"In die ordinationis episcopi manissime pulsetur, et cantetur prima, postquam eatur ad capitulum; ibique a decano, archidiacono, cantore et cancellario ordinantur qui debent præcedere ministri, sicut in majoribus mos est festivitibus: hoc est, duo acolythi cum thuribulis, duo subdiaconi cum crucibus, septem acolythi cum candelabris et cereis, septem subdiaconi cum evangeliorum libris, septem diaconi cum suis reliquiis, duodecim presbyteri induti planetis, acolythus indutus podere cum vaseculo aureo chrismatis.

"Tertia pulsetur temporaneè, et interim præparet se dominus archiepiscopus, sandaliis et cæteris omnibus usque ad dalmaticam. Tunc indutus cappa, et tenens baculum pastorem in manu, procedit e sacrario. Similiter omnes episcopi exeant induti. Ipse autem electus neodum induatur sandaliis, sed tantum alba, et stola, et cappa; nec ferat baculum, sed ponatur super altare cum anulo, usque dum consecratus accipiat de manu archiepiscopi.

"Venientes autem in ecclesia ponantur sedes ita. Dominus metropolitanus sedebit verso dorso ad altare. Sedilia vero cæterorum episcoporum ponantur ante oculos metropolitani. Sedes autem ipsius electi ponatur in medio, non tamen ad majus altare. Comprovinciales autem episcopi offerant electum domino metropolitanis his verbis:

"Reverende pater, postulat etc." Vetera Analecta. p. 228.

The "poderis" in the above extract was a vestment, of much the same kind as the "camisia;" (see above, p. 19. note 29.) Duncange in his glossary cites Euche- ligentissime examinetur cum omni caritate, de fide unctæ Trinitatis, et interrogetur de diversis causis moribus, quæ huic regimini congruunt, et neces-saria sunt retineri, secundum apostoli dictum, manus tuo nemini imposueris; et ut etiam is qui ordinandus rudens, si docibilis, si moribus imperatus, si vita castus, si so-rius, si semper suis negotiis caens, si humilis, si affabilis, mise-icors, si literatus, si in lege Donini instructus, si in scripturarum sensibus cantus, si in dogmatibus ecclesiasticis exercitatus: et ante omnia, si fidei documenta verbis simplicibus asserat: id est Patrem et Filium et Spiritum Sanctum, etc." And then follows an exact examination, grounded on the Apostles' creed. Again, in the 8th century, the second Nicene council, in its second canon, which Martene appeals to, ordered, "— decernimus quemlibet, qui ad episcopalem gradum est provehendus, — a metropolitano bene examinari, an ad sacros canones di-ligenter, ac cum perscrutatione, prompto sit animo, et sacrum etiam evangelium, et librum divini apos-toli, omnemque divinam Scriptu-ram, et in divinis præceptis versari, et populum suum docere."

Mansi. Tom. xij. col. 748.

But, remembering the ill reception which the decrees of this council met with in the West, I would rather attribute the insertion of this examination to canons of other synods in Gaul or Spain:

thus, we have one, to name no more, of the eleventh council of Toledo, in the preceding century,
 A. D. 675. "Placuit huic sancto concilio, ut unusquisque qui ad ecclesiasticos gradus est accessurus, non ante honoris consecrationem accipiat, quam placiti sui in-nodatione promittat, ut fidem catholicam sincera cordis devotione custodiens, juste et pie vivere de-beat." Ibid. Tom. xi. col. 143.

It is very probable that the particular interrogations regarding the change of the Bread and Wine in the Eucharist, were in consequence of the teaching of Berengarius, and inserted into the English pontificals by the influence of Archbishop Lanfranc, his great opponent. In which case, the Winchester MS. is possibly as early as any manuscript in which they are to be found: being nearly contemporary with that archbishop. The student will observe presently, that those particular questions are not in the pontificals of Bangor and Exeter. With respect to the first, this is very remarkable, and much more so with regard to the other, a manuscript of the latter part of the 14th century, in the time of Bishop Lacy.

terrogation from that early MS.

“Vis sanctæ Dorobernensi ecclesiæ fidem et subjectionem per omnia exhibere?”

The Bangor Use agrees with the text: in the Exeter pontifical the question runs:

All three pontificals omit the form in which the profession is to be made, passing on immediately to the next interrogation: “Vis mores, etc.”

The reader should consult Wilkins, Concilia, for the forms of some later oaths, about the period of the reformation: for example; in 1540, Tom. 3. p. 855:—in 1544. p. 870.—in 1550. Tom. 4. p. 67. And again, for several early examples, a collection printed by Hearne, at the end of the Textus Roffensis, p. 245. etc. and others, in the Anglia Sacra. tom. 1. p. 78.

“Hic petatur a consecrante bulla juramenti, et consecrandus eam legat, et secundum tenorem ejusdem prætet domino papæ suum juramentum.” This note is in a contemporary hand and character of writing, and possibly may have been an accidental omission: but I have not thought it right to insert it in the text.

<sup>20</sup> This rubric is to the same effect, and in nearly the same words, in both the Winchester and Bangor MSS. The first proceeds at the end of it;

“Qualiter ordinetur episcopus. Pontifex cum ordinatur, primo progreditur dominus metropolitanus cum cuncto clero ad

ecclesiam: ubi ipsam vult fieri ordinationem. Veniens autem ante altare mox ut voluerit indicat primo cantorum, et statim cantor levat antiphonam ad introitum: Benedixit te hodie Deus. Ps. Deus Deorum. Cumque finierint introitum non dicant, Kyrieleison: sed dominus metropolitanus incipiat: Gloria in excelsis Deo. Hoc finito dicat: Pax vobis. Postea orationem hanc: Adesto supplicationibus, etc.”

The Bangor pontifical merely adds: “Deinde cantor incipiat antiphonam ad introitum et cætera ex more: sequitur oratio. Post orationem missæ immediate: Adesto, etc.””

The Exeter pontifical proceeds,

Adesto supplicationibus nostris, omnipotens Deus, t quod nostræ humilitatis gerendum est ministerio, uæ virtutis impleatur effectu. <sup>22</sup> The Winchester pontifical thus proceeds:

“Interim autem innuit dominus metropolitanus archidiacono: et ipse descendens vadit extra chorum, ubi expectat qui ordinandus est: et accipiens vestimentum induat eum. Et finito gradali, dominus metropolitanus ascendit ad altare. Et archidiaconus adducit electum ad altare, ubi dominus metropolitanus stat. Et inclinat se idem electus pontifex ad terram, et dicit dominus metropolitanus:

Et finito gradale, dominus archiepiscopus ascendat ad altare, et duo episcopi, capis induti, deducant electum superius ante altare ubi dominus archiepiscopus sedet, et ille sedendo cum mitra dicit :*

Episcopum oportet iudicare, interpretari, consecrare, confirmare, ordinare, offerre, et baptizare.

Deinde, deposita mitra, convertet se archiepiscopus ad circumstantes, et dicat hanc exhortationem :

Oremus, dilectissimi nobis, ut huic viro ad utilitatem ecclesie provehendo, benignitas omnipotentis Dei gratie sue tribuat largitatem. Per Dominum.

fundens benedictionem super eum dicat lenta voce :

“ Oremus. Et diaconus: Flectamus genua. Levate.

In the Bangor pontifical we have :

“ Interim dum hæc fiunt, egrediatur archidiaconus cum acolytis et subdiaconis: et induat ipsum electum dalmaticam planetam: et duo episcopi casulis induti deducant eum superius ante altare. Et convertens, se archiepiscopus ad circumstantes, dicat exhortationem:

“ Oremus, dilectissimi nobis, etc.”

In the Exeter MS. it is as fol-

“ Et cætera omnia cantentur usque ad repetitionem alleluia, vel ad ultimum versum tractus: tunc sedente episcopo deducant electum ante altare coram consecratore, et dicat consecrator electo:

“ Episcopum oportet, etc.

“ Et statim incipiatur litania, et interim tam consecrator quam electus accumbant versus altare, ita quod electus maneat a sinistris consecratoris, postquam dictum fuerit, Ut obsequium servitutis nostræ. Tunc surgat consecrator, et ad consecrandum se vertens, baculum pastorem in manu sinistra tenens, dicat primo:

Ut hunc electum bene ✠ dicere digneris.

Resp. Te rogamus.

Ut hunc electum bene ✠ dicere, et sancti ✠ ficare digneris.

Resp. Te rogamus.

Ut hunc electum bene ✠ dicere, sancti ✠ ficare, et conse ✠ crare digneris.

Resp. Te rogamus.

<sup>23</sup> I would cite a canon of a council of London, in the year 1126, referring to these: "Statuimus præterea et apostolica auctoritate decernimus, ut in consecrationibus episcoporum, non capra, non tapetæ, non manutergium, non baccinia, et nil omnino per violentiam, nisi sponte oblatum fuerit, penitus exigatur." Wilkins: Concilia. tom. 1. p. 408. The reader may compare a canon passed at Westminster, a few years after, to the same purpose. Ibid. p. 415.

<sup>24</sup> It has just been seen, that the Winchester pontifical does not specify whether the book was to be open or closed: and on account of an abuse which crept in about the 11th century, and spoken of in a succeeding note, I shall transcribe the corresponding rubric, agreeing in both, of the Bangor and Exeter pontificals.

"Finita vero litania, surgant omnes præter electum: et duo episcopi ponant et teneant librum seu codicem evangeliorum super cervicem ejus et inter scapulas clausum."

Cap. 14. But his statement must be somewhat corrected, for if this rite may not be traced up to the apostolic age, yet it has the practice of a very high antiquity to plead in its behalf. As the reader has already seen (note 21.) it was a part of the office in the pontifical of Egbert: it is in the sacramentary of S. Gregory: and enjoined by the 2nd canon of the often-quoted council of Carthage: "Episcopus cum ordinatur," are its words, "duo episcopi ponant et teneant evangeliorum codicem super caput et cervicem ejus: et uno super eum fundente benedictionem, reliqui omnes episcopi, qui adsunt, manibus suis caput ejus tangant."

Palladius in his life of S. Chrysostom mentions it; where speaking of a consecration by heretics, he says, "Non horruerunt evangelium scelesto capiti imponere." And Menard in his notes to the passage in the sacramentary, cites S. Chrysostom himself, alluding to the practice. But I would add, earlier than all these above cited, the testimony of the author of the Apostolical Constitutions, where, speaking of the order of the consecration of a bishop, he says: "σιωπης γενομενης, εις των πρωτων επισκοπων αμα και δυοιν ιεροισι, πλησιον του θυσιαστηριου εστωσ, των λοιπων επισκοπων και πρεσβυτερων σιωπη προσευχομενων, των δε διακονων τα θεια ευαγγελια επι της του χειροτονημενου καφαλης ανεπτυγμενα κατεχοτων, λεγεται προς Θεον." *Lib. 8. cap. iv.**

It does not seem uncalled for, to add some of the mystical reasons which have been given for the observance of this very ancient rite. Peter Damian tells us: "Ponitur et evangelica pagina super caput illius recumbentis, ut verbo vitæ sentiat excedere rationem, et oculi ejus deficient in eloquium Domini." Sermo. 1. de Dedicacione. Amalarius also, although, as Catalani remarks, he had been objecting to the reasonableness of the observance, yet immediately adds: "Potest tamen evangelii positio super caput, monere tenentes, ut quo Dominus idem evangelium firmet in corde ejus, de-

* It will be observed that here the book of the Gospels is directed to be held by deacons: and the student should consult the observations of Habertus: though I precentur, aut, ut moneant, eum, qui consecratur, recordari se amplius esse sub jugo Evangelii, quam foret." Lib. 2. cap. xiv. But all these must be referred to the judgment of S. Chrysostom; who, cited by Habertus, (p. 79.) has said: "Dum ordinantur sacerdotes, Evangelium capiti imponitur, quo discat ordinatus veram se accipere Evangelii tiaram: discat etiam, tametsi omnium sit caput, se tamen esse sub legibus, et quum omnibus dominetur, legis imperio subjici: cumque omnibus legem ponat, a lege gubernari.— Quod igitur Evangelium accipiat pontifex, significat eum esse sub potestate constitutum." Homil. de laude Evangelii.

Nor can I pass by, without remark, another matter which, there is undeniable evidence to prove, was connected with this placing of the Book of the Gospels upon the head of the new bishop. I shall extract the observations of Catalani. "Reliquum est, ut illud notemus, consuevisse olim cum Evangelii codex super caput imponeretur, ex occurrenti in prima pagina sacri textus sententia faustum infaustumque omen de futura episcopi administratione prænosci. Certe, in ordinatione Athanasii patriarchæ Constantinopolitani, tradit Pachimera lib. 2. cap. xv. verba illa occurrisse: Qui para-

tus est diabolo, et angelis ejus. Quod improbis ejusdem patriarchæ actis comprobatum est, eamque ob causam sede illa depulsus. Contra, in consecratione Lanfranci Cantuariensis archiepiscopi apparuerunt verba: Date eleemosynam, et ecce omnia munda sunt vobis. Qui præsul in largiendo eleemosynas valde fuit insignis. Alia id generis exempla multa ecclesiastici scriptores produunt; ex quibus perperam quidam arbitrati sunt, ad inquirendas sortes evangelium in ordinatione episcoporum adhiberi consuevisse." Comment. in pontif. tom. 1. p. 196.

With respect to all this, the obvious wish is, that these statements as to the fact may be unfounded: or at least that such a superstitious and objectionable practice was never recognized or allowed in this country. The case of Lanfranc, we must nevertheless confess, is unhappily supported by other examples: one, in the reign of Edward the Confessor, of Wulstan, bishop of Worcester: of whose consecration this circumstance is related; "Nec vero sine divino nutu credi fas est prognosticon hoc ei fuisse, 'Ecce vero Israelita, in quo dolus non est.'" Vita S. Wlstani. Anglia Sacra. tom. 2. p. 251. And another, the successor of Lanfranc: for Matthew Paris has told us of Arch-

 ready shewn, the English pontificals are unanimous, after this time, in directing the book to be closed:
 and I think it can scarcely be denied, that this particular order was wisely and religiously intended to put a stop to such a practice; one, which there are few who would not condemn at all times, and much more, on the occasion of so great a solemnity.

"The rubric in the Roman pontifical, after the delivery of the Book of the Gospels, is, similar to that in the Exeter MS.: "Deinde consecrator, et assistentes episcopi ambabus manibus caput consecrandi tangunt, dicentes: Accipe Spiritum Sanctum."

This is a remarkable difference.
 as the reader will presently see.
 For the later schoolmen have placed the "Form" in these words.
 "Accipe, &c." To quote the statement of Catalani: "Omnes prope scholastici, qui de materia, et forma episcopatus disputant, illius formam in his verbis consti-tuunt: Accipe Spiritum Sanctum, quæ a consecratore, et assistentibus episcopis, posito evangelii codice super ordinandi caput, et illud tangentibus, statim proferuntur." Comment. in pontif. tom.
1. p. 197. But none of the English pontificals, except the Exeter, contains this "Form": and Mar-tene acknowledges, "verba illa — toti antiquitati ignota fue-runt: adeo ut vix in ullo pontificali annos 400. attingente re-periantur. Nam ex omnibus quæ percurrimus, tria tantum illa ha-bent, Arelatense, Andegavense, et Guillelmi Durandi." The council of Trent however has declared;
 "Si quis dixerit, per sacram ordi-nationem non dari Spiritum Sanc-

Veni Creator, ut supra in ordinibus.

um; ac proinde, frustra episcopos icere; 'Accipe, etc.'—anathema sit." The difficulty therefore is the same as that already spoken of, p. 194. note 55. and the Roman controversialists are equally unsuccessful in this case, as in the former. The later schoolmen, who had the altered Roman Ordinal before them, did not know, what more accurate enquiries proved, that these words were of late introduction: they therefore not unwillingly seized upon them, to round off, if I may say so, the peculiar opinions of their day: and the council of Trent adopted their decisions.

It would however be unjust not to quote the argument by which Morinus, in his famous work, de sacris ordinationibus, attempts to evade the Tridentine canon: and I the more willingly do this, because it shews that the point of that canon has neither been mistaken, nor unjustly urged against the peculiar doctrine of the Church of Rome in this matter: the reader will scarcely think it is more than an evasion, even if it amounts to that. For the question is not, whether the grace of the Holy Spirit is given at ordination, but, as both matter and form have been accurately laid down as essentials, and defined, whether the council of Trent has or has not decided that the "Form" consists in certain words, which for more than a thousand years, the Church had not admitted, or used. He says:

"Neque huic universi traditioni contradicit concilium Tridentinum. Certum est quod ait per sacram ordinationem tradi Spiritum Sanctum, neque frustra episcopos dicere, Accipe Spiritum Sanctum, cum ordinationis virtute detur Spiritus Sanctus. Alaudit concilium ad ea verba quæ ab aliquot sæculis non tantum in episcopatus, sed etiam in presbyteratus et diaconatus collatione dicuntur. Non frustra igitur dicuntur ista verba, cum catholicis certum sit ordinationis ritu obicem non ponentibus Spiritum Sanctum dari, et gratiam produci. Præterea ab antiquissimis temporibus tam apud Latinos quam apud Græcos, — invocatur Spiritus Sanctus. — Sed aliqui ab annis, paulo plus minusque quadringentis existimantes invocationem Spiritus Sancti non sufficere, addere voluerunt traditionem Spiritus Sancti modo imperativo. — Verum concilium Tridentinum declarato ordinationis sacræ principali effectu, inde verba illa ab episcopis non frustra dici tantum colligit, et me-

Si his verbis formam definire voluissent Patres, cum tres sint ordinationis sacræ gradus, sive species, et in unaquaque dicatur, Accipe Spiritum Sanctum, aut unam saltem cui conveniret, definire debuerunt, quod ab iis non est factum; aut tribus speciebus conveniet, quod nemo admittit. Sed rem ita se non habere ex argumento præcedente indubitanter constat." Pars. III. Exerc. 2. cap. ij.

It will not fail to be observed, how Morinus has here confused the whole subject: and as he has mixed up with his argument the same "Form" as it is in the ordination of priests, I would refer the reader to my note on that place, adding this plain extract from the Catechismus ad parochos. Speaking of the rite of ordination of priests, that authority states: "Ad extremum vero, manibus iterum ejus capiti impositis; Accipe, inquit, Spiritum Sanctum: quorum remiseras peccata, remittuntur eis; et quorum retinueris retenta sunt; eique cœlestem illam, quam Dominus discipulis suis dedit, peccata retinendi, ac remittendi potestatem tribuit." p. 205. edit. Aldus. 1566.

Et idcirco huic famulo tuo, quem ad summi sacerdotii ministerium elegisti, hanc, quæsumus Domine, gratiam largiaris, ut quicquid illa velamina in fulgore auri, in nitore gemmarum, et in multimodi operis varietate signabant, hoc in ejus moribus actibusque clarescat. gato prius capite lineo retorto, ne chrisma defluat in capillos ex more Romanæ curiæ, cum pollice dextræ manus totam tonsuram, dicens: Unguatur, et consecratur, etc." Exon.

I must add, that both the Exeter and the Bangor MSS. omit the sentence, "per sacri chrismatibus — benedictionem," in the Form, at anointing.

<sup>21</sup> I must refer the student for the ancient forms and prayers, as they were in the pontificals of Egbert and Dunstan, to Martene, tom. 2. where the ordinals are printed.

Menard, in his notes to the Sacramentary of S. Gregory, cites an English pontifical in which the head was to be anointed twice: "Porro in pontificali, quod Anglicanum esse creditur, duplex est unctio capitis, prior cum oleo et chrismate, secunda post manuum unctionem cum oleo tantum. — Quæ non sunt in editis et aliis codicibus nostris." p. 517. Nor does Catalani, or Martene seem to have known any other example of this practice.

It would therefore seem to have been peculiar to the Ordinal of some of the English churches. The reader, by a careful comparison of the note below, p. 265. 33. and 30. will see that the Winchester MS. exactly agrees with that which Menard speaks of; — that the Exeter and Bangor pontificals anoint the head once only; — and that the Salisbury Use was to anoint the head twice, but first with the mixed chrism and oil, and afterwards, before the unction of the hands, with chrism only.

I regret that my space prevents my entering, at length, into the subject of the ancient unction of priests and bishops: but, referring the student to the chief writers on the subject, I would sum up the intention and meaning of the rite, in the words of a very learned writer. "Concludo, sacerdotum tam superioris, quam inferioris ordinis manus inungi; primo, ut ad laborem, ad ministerium, ad diligentem et sedulam operam utrorumque manus indurentur et confirmentur: secundo, ut ad misericordiæ opera charitatis oleo diffuentes manus habere moneantur, non aridas, non contractas, non

lem virtutem habeant: quæ scilicet præsertim conscientiæ puritate et nitore indiget: si quid proinde detrahi debet presbyterali unctione, quo præcellere ipsi possit episcopalis, non oleum, quod conscientiæ puritatem designat, sed balsamum, quod famæ claritatem significat, detrahendum, illudque episcopalis unctionis materiæ adjungendum. Denique infero, caput solius episcopi inungi, quia solus regiminis perfectam scientiam, solus gratiæ præsidendi perfectionem, solus regendi absolutam auctoritatem, solus perfectæ ecclesiæ caput est episcopus, solus tandem caput ecclesiæ Christum perfectius exhibet: presbyteri nec plenitudinem omnem sacerdotii sibi vendicant, nec sine episcopis aliquid gerendi auctoritatem, nec perfectæ ecclesiæ capita sunt, nec Christi perfecta exemplaria." Hallier: de sacris Electionibus, Pars. III. viij. 10. p. 464.

<sup>35</sup> There is no mention of any unction of the hands in the sacramentary of S. Gregory: and I think it may be asserted that the pontifical of archbishop Egbert is the earliest MS. in which it is to be found. From England it was however adopted not long after into the foreign churches, as appears from several ancient orders printed by Martene. There are frequent references also in several authors to this practice, reaching up to nearly the time of Egbert. Peter Damian speaks of it, in immediate connexion with the consecration of bishops: "Liniantur et manus, ut quicquid benedixerint benedicatur, et acceptum sit divinæ majestatis aspectui." Serm. 1. de Ecc. dedicatione. And Pope Innocent III. "Hoc unguento caput, et manus episcopi consecrantur." De sacr. unctione. cap. 1. Menard cites also a synodical epistle, (concl. Carisiacum, Quiercy on Oise) A. D. 838, in which the unction of the hands is spoken of.

The student will see below that this unction was ordered to extend from the right thumb: and from note 33, that in the Bangor use, the thumb is still more particularly specified. Both Menard and Catalani have observed this, from some manuscripts which they had collated : and remark upon it, proving that there was, in some churches, a separate unction of the thumb : and in fact, an ancient ordinal of the church of Rouen, before referred to, has an express prayer "ad pollicem consecrandum." Although, (upon the other side,) it does not make any mention of an unction of the hands. Mabillon. Analecta. p. 229. But it is doubtful whether this separate unction of the thumb was adopted at any time by the church of Salisbury : and it is further not impossible, that the variations of the English MSS. consist only in the obscurity of the rubrics, all meaning the same thing, as is clearly enough expressed in the text above, that the unction of the hands should begin from the right thumb. Menard cites a passage, not very clear, in support of his view, from Gulielmus Parisiensis : "Quemadmodum in consecratione pontificum perfectio, et plenitudo legitur ; sicut in unctionibus capitis, manuum, et pollicis, pinguedo internæ unctionis." Cap. de extr. Unct. A short rubric has been inserted into the margin of the pontifical, in a later hand, which would however seem to direct, that a separate unction of the thumb was to be performed : but I would not rely upon the authority of such an interpolation. "Hic prius consecrator, et post alii episcopi, chrismate confirment pollicem dexterum electi, sic dicendo : ' Oremus.'"

was scarcely introduced into the Church of England: and that the nearest approach was a prayer, the use of gloves, as a portion of the proper episcopal vestments, was not of very high antiquity in England, as in other of the Wes-

an especial part of the office of consecration.

For there can be no question their constant and universal by bishops for centuries in country: this is certain from testimony of illuminations, and crosses, and sculptures.* It is a remarkable circumstance also, that is very prayer in the text, "Imensam clementiam" is appointed to be said in the ancient "Ordo" printed by Hittorpius, p. 99, quando episcopus induitur manicis; for so, as was not unusual at that age, the "chirothecæ" were termed. Therefore we cannot refuse to the "chirothecæ" the authority of long use, though we need not give credit to Hugo Victorinus, Innocent III., or Durand, who, following the author of the "Gemma," have not hesitated to say, "Chirothecarum usus ab apostolis est traditus." Gemma Animæ. lib. 1. cap. 215.

The position in which this prayer occurs in the text, is certainly more natural than according to the modern Roman custom; by which, the gloves are made a chief ornament, not referred to the unction, and that they may be put on, the ring is of course ordered to be removed. It is probable, I think, that the allusion, and a mere allusion only, to them in the Sarum pontifical, is to be traced to that earlier age, when they were worn by priests as well as bishops. Saussajus asserts that even then there was a difference observed: "nam presbyterales ex corio erant, episcopales ex serico, aureum circulum (teste Innocentio III.) desuper habentes. Sacerdotes erant consutæ, pontificiæ textiles ac inconsutiles, ad unitatis ecclesiæ quæ in episcopo residet mysticum indicium." Panopl. Episc. p. 354. With respect to this last point, there is the testimony of the "Gemma," in the chapter above cited: "chirothecæ sunt inconsutiles, quia actiones pontificis debent rectæ fidei esse concordæ."

I transcribe the prayer which is now in the Roman Pontifical: and

* To these may be added Inventories: for example of S. Paul's, A. D. 1295. "Item, duæ chirothecæ, in quibus deficiunt multi lapilli. Item duo paria chirothecarum, ornata laminis argenteis deauratis, et lapidibus insertis." Dugdale. S. Paul's p. 205. And, of Canterbury: "Chirothethe office of consecration. Isidore Hispalensis says ; " Huic autem, um consecratur, datur baculus, t ejus indicio subditam plebem el regat, vel corrigat, vel infirmates infirmorum sustineat." De liv. off. lib. 2. v. (Hittorpius edit. p. 20.) Venerable Bede also, the contemporary of Egbert : " Baculum habet episcopus, ut subditos regat, infirmos sustineat." De vij. ordinibus. Martene cites also the following from a life of S. Cæsar Arelatensis : " Cum ergo vir Dei Cæsarius per eandem pergeret ecclesiam, clericus cui cura erat baculum illius portare, quod notari- orum officium erat, oblitus est." Tom. 2. p. 28. Once more : Hugo St. Victor explains other meanings attached to the pastoral staff : " Episcopo, dum regimen ecclesiæ committitur, baculus quasi pastori traditur, in quo tria notantur, quæ significatione non carent, recurvitas, virga, cuspis ; significatio hoc carmine continetur :

VOL. III.

Item,

<sup>38</sup> The delivery of the ring also forms a part of the ceremonial of Egbert : and before that time, Isidore Hispalensis, in the place before cited, note 37, immediately adds : " Datur et annulus propter signum pontificalis honoris, vel signaculum secretorum." Neither Amalarius, Alcuin, or Rabanus Maurus make any mention of it ; and Catalani supposes that it was not until after their time that it was generally introduced into the churches of Germany. Comment. tom. 1. p. 208. The author, however, of the "Gemma Animæ" speaks of it, and says : " Annulli usus ex evangelio acceptus creditur, ubi saginati vituli conviva prima stola vestitur, annulo insignitur. — Pontifex ergo annulum portat, ut se sponsum ecclesiæ agnoscat, ac pro illa animam, si necesse fuerit, sicut Christus ponat." Cap. 216. Bibl. Patrum. Auct. tom. 1. col. 1285.

<sup>39</sup> This ceremony is of very late introduction : Catalani supposes that there is no trace of it in any pontifical before the 12th century ; but as the reader has already seen, note 33, the Winchester MS. has a reference to it, but without an express prayer : "Hic imponatur mitra capiti ejus." The benediction and prayer both occur in the Bangor pontifical.

I do not think it requisite to enter here into the controversy, as to the date at which mitres began to be used in the Western Church. The great authorities for an extreme antiquity are Sausajus, Panoplia Episcopalis, lib. 1. and Joseph Vicecomes, de app. Missæ. cap. xxix. Cardinal Bona takes a middle view of the question, by drawing a distinction between the mitre, properly so called, and some other ornament of the head, which, of some kind, was always worn from the primitive ages. Rerum lit. lib. 1. cap. xxiv. Martene, de ant. ecc. rit.

lib. 1. cap. iv. following Mabillon. Præf. Sæc. iv. Bened. p. II. clxxxij. takes another ground : that the mitre was always an episcopal ornament, but that for many centuries it was made the subject of an especial grant and privilege from the Pope. Lastly Menard, in his notes to the Sacramentary of S. Gregory, declares that it was not introduced until the 10th century ; and he relies upon the fact that there is no mention made of it in the ancient pontificals, nor in the ritualists before that time ; either by Alcuin, or Amalarius, etc. This is undoubtedly a very powerful argument, and the only fact by way of evidence which is brought upon the other side, is an account of the examination of some supposed remains of pope Leo the Great : "in quibus super ejus caput mitra genus inventum est." Georgius. tom. 1. p. 231. So that the question, as regards facts, is still where Menard has left it. The most

But I would add an extract from Innocent III. as to the mystical meaning and signification of the mitre. "Mitra pontificis scientiam utriusque testamenti significat: nam duo cornua, duo sunt testamenta, duæ fimbriæ spiritus, et litera: circulus aureus, qui anteriorem et posteriorem partem complectitur, indicat, quod omnis scriba doctus in regno cælorum de thesauro suo nova profert, et vetera. Caveat ergo diligenter episcopus, ne prius velit esse magister, quam norit esse discipulus, ne si cæcus cæcum duxerit, ambo in foveam cadant." Lib. 1. cap. xlv. The student can consult also the "Gemma Animæ," cap. 214. Hugo Victorinus, de sacr. lib. 1. cap. 55: both these in the Auctarium to the Bibl. Patrum. tom. 1. And Durandus. lib. 3. cap. xij. 5.

and the staff are appointed in all of them, but not the mitre or the book of the Gospels. None, also, of the earlier ritualists mention it: Isidore, or Alcuin, or Amalarius: and as it is not enjoined in the Winchester MS. although we find it in the Bangor, we may conclude that it began to be generally adopted in England, soon after the mitre, in the 12th or 13th century. Some writers of the Roman communion have argued that this delivering of the Gospels is "pars materiæ episcopatus:" to this Morinus objects, that the new bishop is after the unction, styled by the rubrics "consecratus," and not "electus." De sacr. Ordin. p. 18. And Catalani agrees with him: Comment. tom. 1. p. 210. But as far as the argument is concerned, it is somewhat curious, that in this particular place, the rubric of the Sarum pontifical does call the bishop, "electus." Nevertheless we may consent to the judgment of Catalani, (however he may have arrived at it, or to serve what end) that all these parts of the ordinal, the staff, ring, mitre, &c., are neither necessary,

De Inthronizatione Episcopi.<sup>1</sup>

Decanus cum cæteris dignitatibus et canonicis ecclesiæ occurrant episcopo extra civitatem, et eo

<sup>1</sup> I shall not offer any apology for the length of the note which I insert here: as the importance of it will amply justify its introduction. It contains first, the order of receiving and inthroning the Bishop of Salisbury in his own cathedral, about the middle of the fifteenth century. Although bearing a close resemblance to the order printed in the text, from the manuscript which has supplied so many of the offices edited in these volumes, yet there will be found some important variations. The Order in the text is that which was used in the cathedral to which the pontifical originally belonged, and which very probably retained in such an office, as the inthronization of its bishop, some ancient peculiarities.

In the same way, there are variations between the Form of the Greater excommunication as it was said on some occasions in the cathedral of Salisbury, and the same Form, as it stands in the editions of the Manuale ad usum Sarum. See Vol. 2, p. 286. And again, the Form of bidding the bedes, printed below, will be found to differ from those in the printed manuals.

The order which now follows, is taken from a manuscript in the possession of the dean and chapter of Salisbury. There are careful erasures in many parts, some of which occur below: rendering the words quite illegible. It is unfortunately much rubbed and defaced in other places.

*“ Sequitur hic modus recipiendi novum episcopum, post munus consecrationis adeptum, antequam inthronizetur in ecclesia cathedrali Sarum. In primis ordinabitur processio per illos quorum interest more duplicis festi, in qua præcedere debent quatuor personæ ecclesiæ processionaliter. doubt that these two pontificals contemplate the consecration of the bishop in his own cathedral: in which case the inthronization would take place at once, and form a part of the great solemnity. Or, according to the Uses of those churches in the office of consecration, the ceremony still retained in the church of Rome, might have been intended: namely, the placing of the new bishop in a "seat" or "throne" either prepared for him, or that in which the consecrating bishop had sat. It may not be improper to extract the rubric on this point from the modern Roman pontifical, as it illustrates what I have just said.

The pontifical of Egbert includes the inthronization, in the Order of Consecration: appointing two prayers only:

"Modo mittatur in cathedram episcopalem, et hæc oratio dicenda est:

"Omnipotens Pater, sancte: etc.

This pontifical doubtless supposed the consecration to be in the new bishop's own cathedral.

ecclesia sancta : angeli recipiant te, et pax tecum inseparabilis per Redemptorem, Dominum nostrum, Jesum Christum, qui cum Patre et Spiritu Sancto vivit et regnat in sæcula sæculorum.

Benedictio Dei omnipotentis, Patris ✠, et Filii ✠, et Spiritus Sancti, super te descendat, et maneat semper. Amen.<sup>2</sup>

Officium inthronizationis archiepiscopi, si pallium a sede apostolica personaliter receperit.<sup>1</sup>

ONVENTUS a summo mane, totum servitium usque ad magnam missam celebrabit. Cum enim archiepiscopus civitatem ingressus fuerit, prior et conventus, capis induti, usque ad portam cæmeterii cum solemnii processione <sup>1</sup> Both the Bangor and the Exeter pontificals contain this office: and I think the most simple method will be to transcribe the order, as it stands in those MSS., referring to the prayers which are to be found also in the text. The reader will thus the better understand the full order, as it was in the latter part of the fifteenth century, after various alterations and additions had been made.

First, the Bangor MS.

Deinde ducatur ad cathedram pontificalem, et in eam cum honore mittatur. Ubi, eo sedente, decantetur a fratribus sex vel octo stantibus ante solium, modico in eorum medio existente spatio. Quorum una medietas dicat hujus antiphonæ hanc partem:

nire. Per Dominum.

In the Exeter pontifical, the Order is as follows.

“ In Dei nomine. Amen. Auctoritate ejusdem, etc.

“ Deinde ducatur ad cathedram pontificalem, et in ea cum honore collocetur, ubi, eo sedente, decantetur alternatim a fratribus coram eo, Ant. Benedictus Deus: qua finita dicatur: Oremus.

Salvum fac servum.

Deus meus sperantem.

Mitte ei, Domine.

Et de Sion.

Dominus vobiscum.

Oremus.

Deus Pater, et pastor ecclesie triumphantis, famulum tuum, quem pastorem ecclesie tue militanti præesse voluisti, propitius respice; da ei verbo et exemplo quibus præest ita proficere, ut ad illorum consortium, quorum vicem gerit in terris, una cum grege sibi credito valeat feliciter pervenire. Per Christum.

Finita collecta, archiepiscopus erigat se, et data populo benedictione, cantor incipiat:

Te Deum laudamus.

Finito Te Deum, prior, deinde singuli fratres per ordinem ad altare accedentes pallium osculentur: deinde archiepiscopum, si tamen archiepiscopus post consecrationem suam tunc primo ecclesiam Cantuarie intraverit.

Finito responsorio, prior subjungat collectam:

Deus, qui ab excelso cœlorum habitaculo, corda fidelium Spiritu Sancto corroborando illustras, archipræsulem nostrum quem sanctitatis pallio decorasti, virtutum quoque cœlestium robore confirma, ut ejus exemplo nos et documento iter vitæ cœlestis ingredi, et cum eo regni tui consortes fieri mereamur. Per Dominum. In unitate ejusdem.

Dicta collecta, prior perducatur archiepiscopum ad cathedram suam pontificalem, et facta modica statione coram cathedra, prior dicat hanc orationem:

Omnipotens sempiternæ Deus, qui cum sis altissimus humilis ad nos descendere dignatus es, te suppliciter exoramus, ut fastidio sacerdotii huic famulo tuo a te collato humilitatis dignitate promoveatur, et sicut in ministerio regiminis sui hanc sedem pontificalem ascensus aggreditur, ita sedem pectoris ejus tuæ inhabitationis visitatione aggrediaris, quatenus solium tuæ sessionis largiente gratia tua existere mereatur: per te, Jesu Christe, qui cum æterno tibi Patre, et Spiritu

Sancto, vivis et regnas Deus. Per omnia sæcula sæculorum. Amen.

*Dicta vero collecta, prior, ad quem pertinet archiepiscopus inthronizare, eundem archiepiscopum inter brachia sua recipiat reverenter,* et archiepiscopum in cathedra pontificali inthronizet, et verba subscripta legat hoc modo :*

* It is possible that this was a relic of a very ancient custom, once observed in the Gallic, and probably in the British churches. Before enthronization, the newly consecrated bishop was carried by the other bishops present, to his seat: or to one prepared for the occasion. Eddius relates the observance of it, in the case of Wilfrid, archbishop of York, the predecessor of Egbert: who was consecrated, not in his own cathedral, but in France. "Ibique statim conventio magna facta est, non minus quam duodecim episcoporum catholicorum, e quibus unus erat Ægelbercthus episcopus, qui eum propter fidem suam indicatam in sella aurea sedentem more eorum sursum elevaverunt, portantes in manibus soli episcopi intra oratoria, nullo alio attingente, hymnosque et cantica in choro canentes." *Vita S. Gloria in excelsis.

Die inthronizationis archiepiscopi quando pallium suum mittitur a sede apostolica per nuncios speciales, ad hoc destinatos, conventus summo mane primam et totum servitium usque ad magnam missam celebrabit.

lium portanti, usque ad portam civitatis per quam intrabit, si serenitas temporis hoc permittat.

Ille vero qui pallium defert de sede apostolica, alba et capa chori erit indutus, et pallium in aliquo vase aureo, vel argenteo, inclusum honorifice portabit.

Cum vero pallium portanti occurrerint, revertetur processio, et procedant qui cruces et alia portant. Deinde minores et omnes alii juxta ordinem suum. Et ultimo sequatur archiepiscopus, et post illum pallium portans. Et reversi in chorum, ponatur pallium super magnum altare.

Ego N. archiepiscopus Cantuarie ab hora _____

<sup>5</sup> In this form, we find no notice of that extraordinary claim which has been introduced into the modern pontifical of the church of Rome. Whatever may have been the actual practice of the primate of the English Church during the two or three centuries immediately preceding the reformation, the office appointed at the reception of the pall, did not recognize any other signification of it, in the Form at its delivery, than the ancient one of a mark of honour and dignity. But that the reader may the better see the distinction, which I am remarking, it will be well to transcribe the corresponding part of the present order of the church of Rome: which, although not adopted in England, is to be traced, it is said, to the authority of Innocent III.

“ Ad honorem omnipotentis Dei, et beatæ Mariæ, — — — tradimus tibi pallium de corpore beati Petri sumptum, in quo est plenitudo pontificalis officii, cum patriarchalis vel archiepiscopalis nominis appellatione, etc.”

With respect to this, the Roman theologians are obliged to confess, that there is not a shadow of any proof of such a claim, or pretence, as that the jurisdiction of a metropolitan depends upon his reception of the pall, to be found in the first centuries after its adoption at all, in any way: not to speak of the ages preceding, during which we hear nothing of the pall. And to such an extent is this usurpation of the court of Rome now pressed, that an archbishop or metropolitan, although consecrated, cannot perform any of those duties, which are peculiar to, or characteristic of, his office: he cannot consecrate a church (for example,) or confer orders. In fact, if he has been previously a bishop, and is translated to this higher dignity, the effect is, that for a time, until he has obtained his pall, he is suspended: and so far from obtaining at once increased power and authority, even that which he had is certainly taken from him for a season, and, if any difficulties are interposed, it can be regained only after a long delay, and trouble, and expense.

whose favour they were granted: for example, in the present case, the principal feasts of the church of Canterbury, and the anniversary of the archbishop's consecration, or "natal day," as it was sometimes called.

The first rubric of the Bangor MS. commences as in the text: it is much defaced and rubbed. After the word "perpetrata," it continues: "Primo ante omnia nocte præcedente reconciliatio*ne* ecclesiae vel altaris, asportentur reliquiae cum cæteris sacris ab ecclesia profanata, et seruentur in tentorio tota nocte cum vigiliis et excubiis dignis. Sed si coemeterium sit tantum profanatum, nihil propter hoc ab ecclesia asportetur. Ipsa autem die reconciliatio*nis*, primo veniat episcopus ante ipsam ecclesiam, cum clero et populo ant. canendo sonora voce, 'Deus in sancto.'

The Exeter MS. begins. "In reconciliatio*ne* ecclesiae seu coemeterii fiat tentorium honestum extra coemeterium, si ecclesia fuerit polluta, a parte occidentali: si vero coemeterium fuerit pollutum, paret se episcopus infra ecclesiam pontificalibus: et pro reconciliatio*ne* ecclesiae præparentur sal, aqua, cineres, vinum, ysopus, scopa ad spargendum aquam. Episcopo vero induto pontificalibus, sicut in dedicationibus ecclesiarum solet indui, et egrediente de tentorio, cantetur a choro antiphona: 'Deus in sancto.'"

Sancto ac venerabili primati suo L. F. episcoporum humillimus, fidelitatis affectum et obsequium. De presbytero nostro ab alio episcopo pro pecunia ordinato, ex auctoritate sanctorum canonum tale vobis consilium dono: primum degradetur, deinde ab ecclesia separatus duobus annis severa poenitentia mulctetur, ut honoris gradus quos pretio taxaverat, lachrymis conquerere et reparare contendat. Postea si digne poenituerit, restauretur. Hoc vero diximus, cum in aliis locis sacris expresse invenietis, in concilio Toletano undecimo capitulo. Cæterum rebaptizationes, et reordinationes canones vetant: propterea depositum non reordinabitis, sed reddetis ei suos gradus per instrumenta et vestimenta, quæ ad ipsos gradus pertinent; ita dicendo: 'Reddo tibi gradum ostiarii, etc. In nomine Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus Sancti. Amen.' Novissime autem benedictione lætificabitis eum, sic concludendo: 'Benedictio Patris omnipotentis, et Filii, et Spiritus Sancti, super te descendat, ut sis confirmatus in ordine sacerdotali, et offeras ei placabiles hostias pro peccatis, atque offensionibus, populi omnipotentis Dei, cui est honor et gloria in sæcula sæculorum. Amen.'

In illo tempore. Recumbentibus undecim discipulis apparuit illis Jesus : et exprobravit incredulitatem eorum, et duritiem cordis : quia iis, qui viderant eum resurrexisse, non crediderunt. Et dixit eis ; euntes in mundum universum, prædicate evangelium omni creaturæ. Qui crediderit et baptizatus fuerit, salvus erit : qui vero non crediderit, condemnabitur. Signa autem eos, qui crediderint, hæc sequentur ; in nomine meo dæmonia ejicient : linguis loquentur novis : serpentes tollent : et si mortiferum quid biberint, non eis nocebit. Super ægros manus imponent, et bene habebunt.

Which clause, Super ægros, etc. the chaplain repeats as long as the king is handling the sick person. And in the time of the repeating the aforesaid words, Super ægros, etc. the clerk of the closet shall kneel be- fore the king, having the sick person upon the right hand, and the sick person shall likewise kneel before the king : and then the king shall lay his hand upon the sore of the sick person.

Et Dominus quidem Jesus, postquam locutus est eis, assumptus est in cœlum, et sedet a dextris Dei. Illi autem profecti prædicaverunt ubique, Domino cooperante, et sermonem confirmante, sequentibus signis.

Sit nomen Domini benedictum.

praying for the sick person or persons :*

Domine exaudi orationem meam.

Et clamor meus ad te veniat.

Oremus.

Omnipotens sempiterne Deus, salus æterna creditum, exaudi nos pro famulis tuis, pro quibus misericordie tue imploramus auxilium, ut reddita sibi sanitate, gratiarum tibi in ecclesia tua referant actiones. Per Christum Dominum nostrum. Amen.

Dominator Domine, Deus omnipotens, cujus beniginitate, cæci vident, surdi audiunt, muti loquuntur, claudi ambulant, leprosi mundantur, omnes infirmorum curantur languores, et a quo solo donum sanationis humano generi etiam tribuitur, et tanta gratia pro incredibili tua erga hoc regnum bonitate, regibus ejusdem concessa est, ut sola manuum illorum impositione, morbus gravissimus foetidissimusque depellatur, concede propitius ut tibi propterea gratias agamus, et pro isto singulari beneficio in nos collato, non nobis ipsis, sed nomini tuo assidue gloriam demus, nosque sic ad pietatem semper exerceamus, ut tuam nobis donatam gratiam non solum diligenter conservare, sed in dies magis magisque adaugere laboremus, et præsta, ut quorumcunque corporibus, in nomine tuo manus imposuerimus, hac tua virtute in illis operante et nobis ministrantibus, ad pristinam sanitatem restituantur, eam conservent, et pro eadem tibi, ut summo medico

The Ceremonies of blessing Cramp- rings, on Good-Friday, used by the Ca- tholick Kings of England.

HE psalme "Deus misereatur nostri, etc,"
with the "Gloria Patri."

May God take pity upon us and blesse us: may he send forth the light of his face upon us, and take pity on us.

That we may know thy ways on earth: among all nations thy salvation.

May people acknowledge Thee, O God: may all people acknowledge Thee.

Let Nations reioice and be glad, because thou iudgest people with equity: and doest guide Nations on the Earth.

May people acknowledge Thee, O God, may all people acknowledge Thee: the Earth has sent forth her fruit.

May God blesse us, that God who is ours: may that God blesse us: and may all the bounds of the Earth feare him.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son: and to the holy Ghost.

As it was in the beginning, and now, and ever: and for ever, and ever. Amen.

Then the King reades this prayer:

Almighty eternal God, who by the most copious gifts of thy grace flowing from the unexhausted fountain of thy bounty, hast been graciously pleased for the comfort of Mankind, continually to grant us many,

The Order of consecrating

and ~~through~~ ~~means~~ to relieve us in our miseries, and art willing to make these the instruments and channels of thy graces, and to grace those persons with more excellent favours, whom Thou hast raised to the Royal dignity: to the end that as by Thee they reign, and govern others: so by Thee they may prove beneficial to them, and bestow thy favours on the People; graciously heare our prayers and favourably receive those vows we powre forth with humility, that Thou mayest grant to us, what wee beg with the same confidence the favour, which our Ancestors by their hopes in thy mercy have obtained, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Kings lying in the prison, or more, this Prayer is to be said for them:

O God, the Maker of heavenly and earthly creatures, and the most gracious Restorer of Mankind, the Dispenser of spiritual Grace, and the origin of all blessings: send downe from heaven thy holy Spirit, the Comforter, upon these Rings, artificially fram'd by the workman, and by thy greates power purify them so, that all the malice of the fowle, and venomous Serpent be driven out; and so the Metal, which by Thee was created, may remaine pure and free from all dregs of the Enemy, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

O God of Abraham, God of Isaac, God of Jacob, heare mercifully our prayers. Spare those, who feare Thee. Be propitious to thy Suppliants, and graciously be pleased to send downe from heaven thy holy Angel; that he may sanctify † and blesse † these rings; to the end they may prove a healthy remedy to such, as implore thy Name with humility, and accuse themselves of the Sins, which ly upon their conscience ; who deplore their crimes in the sight of thy divine Clemency, and beseech with earnestnes, and humility, thy most serene Piety. May they in fine by the invocation of thy holy name become profitable to all such as weare them, for the health of their soule and body, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Blessing.

O God, who hast manifested the greatest wonders of thy Power by the cure of diseases, and who were pleased that Rings should be a pledge of fidelity in the Patriark Judah, a Priestly Ornament in Aaron, the mark of a faithful Guardian in Darius, and in this Kingdom a remedy for divers diseases: graciously be pleased to blesse ✠ and sanctify ✠ these Rings, to the end that all such, who weare them may be free from all snares of the Devil, may be defended by the power of celestial armour, and that no contraction of the nerves, or any danger of the falling-sickness may infest them, but that in all sort of diseases by thy help they may find relief. In the name of the Father, ✠ and of the Son ✠ and of the holy Ghost ✠. Amen.

Blesse, O my Soule, the Lord: and let all things which are within me praise his holy name.

Blesse, O my Soule, the Lord: and do not forget all his favours.

He forgives all thy iniquities: he heales all thy infirmities.

He redeemes thy life from ruin: he crownes thee with mercy and commiseration.

He fils thy desires with what is good: thy youth like that of the eagle shal be renewed.

The Lord is he who does mercy: and does iustice to those, who suffer wrong.

The Office of consecrating

The merciful and pitying Lord: the long sufferer, and most mighty merciful.

He will not continue his anger for ever: neither wil he threaten for ever.

He has not dealt with us in proportion to our sins: nor has he rendred unto us according to our offences.

Because according to the distance of heaven from Earth: so has he enforced his mercies upon those who feare him.

As far distant as the East is from the West: so far has he divided our offences from us.

After the manner that a Father takes pity of his sons; so has the Lord taken pity of those, who feare him: because he knows what we are made of.

He remembers that we are but dust; Man like hey such are his days: like the flower in the field, so wil he fade away.

Because his breath wil passe away through him, and he wil not be able to subsist: and it wil find no longer its owne place.

But the mercy of the Lord is from all eternity: and will be for ever upon those, who feare him.

And his iustice comes upon the children of their children: to those who keep his wil.

And are mindful of his commandements: to performe them.

Blesse yee the Lord all yee works of his throughout all places of his Dominion : my Soule praise thou the Lord.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son : and to the holy Ghost.

As it was in the beginning, and now and ever : and for ever and ever. Amen.

Wee humbly implore, O merciful God, thy infinit clemency ; that as we come to Thee with a confident soule, and sincere faith, and a pious assurance of mind ; with the like devotion thy Beleevers may follow on these tokens of thy grace. May all superstition be banished hence, far be all suspicion of any diabolical fraud, and to the glory of thy name let all things succede ; to the end thy Beleevers may understand Thee to be the Dispenser of all good ; and may be sensible and publish, that whatsoever is profitable to soul or body, is derived from Thee : through Christ our Lord. Amen.

Sanctify, O Lord, these Rings, and graciously bedew them with the dew of thy benediction, and consecrate them by the rubbing of our hands, which thou hast been pleased according to our ministry to sanctify by an external effusion of holy oyle upon them ; to the end that what the nature of the mettal is not able to performe, may be wrought by the greatnes of thy Grace : through Christ our Lord. Amen.

Then must holy water be cast on the Rings, saying :

In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the holy Ghost. Amen.

O Lord, the only begotten Son of God, Mediatour of God and men, Jesus Christ, in whose name alone salvation is sought for, and to such as hope in Thee

340 The Office of consecrating Cramp-rings.

givest an easy access to thy Father; who when conversing among men, thyself a Man, didst promise by an assured Oracle flowing from thy sacred Mouth, that thy Father should grant whatever was asked him in thy name; lend a gracious eare of pity to these prayers of ours; to the end that approaching with confidence to the Throne of thy grace, the Beleevers may find by the benefits conferrd upon them, that by thy mediation we have obtained, what we have most humbly beg'd in thy Name; who livest and reignest with God the Father, in the unity of the holy Ghost, one God, for ever and ever. Amen.

Wee beseech thee, O Lord, that the Spirit, which procedes from Thee, may prevent and follow on our desires; to the end that what we beg with confidence for the good of the Faithful, we may efficaciously obtaine by thy gracious gift: through Christ our Lord. Amen.

O most clement God; Father, Son, and holy Ghost; wee supplicate and beseech Thee, that what is here performed by pious Ceremonies, to the sanctifying of thy Name, may be prevalent to the defense of our soule and body on Earth; and profitable to a more ample felicity in heaven. Who livest and reignest God, world without end. Amen.

De Visitatione Infirmorum.<sup>1</sup>

Y dere sone in God, thou hiest fast thi wai to Godward; there thou shalt see alle thi former faderis, apostils, martiris, confessoris, virginis, and alle men and wommen that be sauid. And therfor be of gode comfort in God, and thou must leyen a ston in the wal of cite of heuen witouten ani noise or strif. And therfor ar thou wenden out of this world, thou must make thi ston redi, and than shalt thu nouzt be lette. ¶ The ston is thi soule wiche thou makest clene; the noise that thou must make here is the thinking of thi sinne, wyche thou must telle the prest; the stroke is penaunce, that thou shalt be sori for thi sinne, and smithe thiself on thi brest; and whan thou hast made redi thus thi ston, than may thou go thi wai in God, and lai thi ston sykerlie [surely] witoute noise in the cite of heuene; and therfor I counsail the, that thou schriue the clene, and make the redi. And this is nouzt only to seke men but also to hole, for everi dai a man nehieth [approacheth] his deth ner and ner; and of a man it is seid, the more he wexith the more he unwexith, and therfor seith the gospel, Awake, for thu wost never whan oure God wil come; and therfor loke thu alwai be redi. And thu shalt wite, [know]

gode man, that God visiteth mani man for his sinnes diversly; some wit prisoning, some wit diverse sekenes, and if the sinne were awai, than his sekenes shuld aslake. Hereof berith witnes the Gospel, that God seith thus to ten mesels [lepers], whan he had helid hem of here lepre, go, he said, and sinne no more on aunter thow falle wors, as who seith, for thowre sinne the had this sekenes. And therfor it is ordeined be the law, that ther shal no leche zeve no bodili medicine to a seke man, til he be helid gostli; and that he have take gostli medicine, that is to sai, schrift and housel; and if ze be wel schrive and veray repentaunt I drede nouzt that the sekenes shal aslake wiche he hath for sinne, or ellis it shal turne him to more blisse after his deth; and therfor if his sekenes aslake nouzt thou shalt comfort him on this maner.

Sone loueste thou thi Lord God? he wil sai, ze. Than thus, 3f thou loue God, thou louest that He doith, and He skorgeth the, and therfor thou shalt gladli suffre it. Here of spekit Salamon, and seith, Sone speke nouzt azen the chastising of thi fader, for it is no sone whom the fader chastisith nouzt, and it acordith wit commine maner of speche. For if a man see anotheris child do schreudeli in his fader presence, and the fader chastised him nouzt, than wold that othir man seie, it is nouzt his sone, or ellis he loueth him nouzt, for if he were his child or ellis loued him, he wold chastise him: and therfor be nouzt evil afraide of thi Fadirs chastising of heuene, for he seith himself: whom I loue, him I chastise. Also sekenes of bodi makith soule hele [health], and soule hele is nouzt but of God; therfor despice nought Godis scorge, but whan God ponissche the, thanke him and loue him, that he emendith the, and undernemith [judgeth] the, and blameth the, and ponische the nouzt in his wrath ne in his wodnes [fury], but in his grete mercy. Thank thi God, and thinke that his merci passeth alle his grete wreche; he is jugge, [?], he wil nouzt damne the, but he wil haue merci on the. Mercifulli he chastise the, and ther [where] thou hast deservid for to have his wrath, and be damned for ever, he puttith ouer his veniaunce, and suffrith of his grete mercy, and ponische the here but awile, and therfor despice nouzt his 3erde [rod] of merci, ne grucche nouzt ther azens, but suffre it gladli, for al the domis [judgments] of God ben rithful. Now sethen [since] sekene of God is hele to the soule, and wille thou or nilt, thou shal haue hit, 3if thou grucche azen God, and wit thi grucching thou makist thi soule more feble, and so thou profitist nouzt to thiself wit thi grucching azen thi Fadir, wiche is thi leche, but greuist thiself on diuerses maners; on [one] is, that thou greuist thi God: another thou shalt nouzt haue so miche gostly mede [reward] as thou shuldest, 3if thou suffred deth pacientliche. And thou shalt knowe that God Fadir of heuene ponissche nout o [one] thing tuyes, and therfor wit a glad hert thou shalt suffre sekene that God hathe sent the here, for it shal alegge [alloy] the of the peyne of purgatorie, so that thou the more soner shal come to the kingdome of heuene. Thinke that if the king to whom thou hast ben tretour, for3euth the thi deth and ponische the but awile in esi prison, thou art michil hold to him. So thou art to God, to whom thou hast ben tretour, and he hath for3iue the euerlasting deth, and ponische the wit a litul sekene here.

Brother, art thou glad that thou shalt die in Cristin feith? Resp. 3e.

Art thou sori therfor? Resp. 3e.

Leuist thou in God, Fader Almighty, Maker of heuene and of erthe? Resp. 3e.

Leuist thou in the Fader and Sone and Holi Gost, thre persons and on [one] God? Resp. 3e.

Leuist thou that oure Lord Jesus Crist Godis Sone of heuene was conseiuid of the Holi Gost, and toke flesche and blode of oure ladi seint Marie, and was borne of hir, she being moder and mayde? Resp. 3e.

Leuist thou that he suffrid pine and deth, for oure trespas, and nouzt for his gilt under Pounce Pilate, and that he was don on the cros, and died for the on god Fridai, and was buried? Resp. 3e.

Thankest thou him therfor? Resp. 3e.

Leuist thou that thou may nouzt be sauid but throw his deth? Resp. 3e.

Tunc dicat sacerdos :

Wil [while] thi soule is in thi bodi, put alle thi trust in his passion and in his deth, and thenke onli theron, and on non other thing. Wit his deth medil the, and wrappe the therinne, nouzt thinking on thi wif, ne on thi children, ne on thi rychesse, but al on the passion of Crist, and haue the crosse [crucifix] to fore the, and sai thus :—I wot wel thou art nouzt my God, but thou

P. lib. 1. 18. Of such a kind probably was the famous psalter of S. Kenelm, concerning which Giraldus relates a miracle, said to have occurred in his own days: by which the sin of a criminous monk was discovered; “qui die crastino ad processionem psalterium prædictum inter reliquias sanctorum ferre præsumens, completa processione solemnitate reversus in chorum, idem manibus suis firmiter adhærens deponere non prævaluit.” Itinerarium. edit. P. lix. note 9. Compare the rules laid down by archbishop Winchelsey, as regarded chaplains and assistant priests, in the year 1305: “quod debeant interesse cancello matutinis, vespersis, et aliis divinis officiis, horis debitis, induti superpelliciiis, de quibus propriis expensis sibi providebunt.” Wilkins. Concil. tom. 2. p. 281. cf. tom. 3. p. 214. With regard to the attendance of a clerk, at Divine Service, besides the priests, in even the smallest parishes, this was frequently insisted on: and we find it often specified in the ordinations of vicarages. Cf. Script. x. tom. 2. p. 2098. 2099. etc.

Among the presentments at the visitation of the archdeacon of Colchester, in 1540, was this. “Notatur per rectorem dictæ ecclesiæ, that there is nother clerke, nor sexten, to go withe him in tyme of visitacion, nor to helpe to say masse, nor to ryng to servyce.” Archdeacon Hale. *Series of precedents, &c. I extract from the English councils a few canons bearing upon this matter. First of a council at Durham, in the year 1220 : “ Præcipimus quod laicis frequenter inhibeat, ne testamenta sua faciant sine præsentia sacerdotis, sicut diligunt, ut eorum ultimæ voluntates adimpleantur. Sacerdotibus similiter inhibemus, ne testamentum suum per manum ordinent laicalem.” Wilkins, tom. 1. p. 583. The synod of Exeter, in 1287, has a long constitution directed to this point, to which I must refer the reader, quoting only its conclusion : “ In fine autem cujuslibet testamenti hanc clausulam adjici volumus generalem : Cætera omnia bona mea, sive in rebus, sive in manibus fuerint debitorum, in hoc testamento non expressa, volo, ut pro animæ meæ salute per manus executorum meorum in pios usus distribuantur ; et quod creditoribus meis per manus eorundem similiter sit satisfactum.” Ibid. tom. 2. p. 157. Again, shortly after, the 31st canon of a synod of the diocese of Sodor : “ Præcipimus et statuimus, quod quilibet languens in extremis agoniis, cum testamentum condere voluerit, vocet capellanum ecclesiæ, et clericum ; et ipsis præsentibus, duobus vel tribus viris adhibitis bonis et fide dignis, testamentum suum ore suo ordinet ; etc.” Ibid. p. 179. Compare also the monition of archbishop Bouchier, in 1455 ; tom. 3. p. 575, and Lyndwood, lib. iii. tit. 13. de testamentis. The Pupilla Oculi has also a chapter on the same subject. Pars. ix. cap. viij.

Archbishop Parker records a remarkable and dreadful case of a dean of S. Paul's, and treasurer of the king. He had plundered, it seems; and lying at last on his death bed, he refused to receive the holy Eucharist; putting it off until the morrow. "Interea ad testamentum condendum monitus est. Ad quod paratus, exire, præter unum scriptorem, cæteros voluit. Is testamentum scripturus, expectans quid decanus diceret, ex more testamentorum sic orsus est; 'In nomine Patris, etc.' Quod cum decanus comperisset, iratus jussit id deleri, et hæc verba tantum scribi. 'Lego omnia bona mea domino regi, corpus sepulturæ, et animam diabolo.' Quo dicto expiravit. Rex cadaver illius jussit curru exportari, atque in amnem projici et demergi." Antiq. Britan. ecc. p. 228. ad an. 1205.

P. cix. Processions. The collections of Wilkins contain very many orders for processions, and for various purposes: sometimes for thanksgivings; sometimes to appease the Divine wrath; and for other causes: on these occasions the inferior clergy were generally directed to wear surplices. Not unfrequently the consecrated Eucharist was carried in the procession: as, for example, Walsingham says: "Per idem tempus, [1389], Cantabrigiæ in festo commemorationis S. Pauli, occurrebat et festum dedicationis sanctæ Mariæ ibidem, ad quod festum amplius honorandum, in processione per parochiam deferebatur corpus dominicum, super duos humeros sacerdotum in feretro non ponderoso, etc." Hist. Angl. p. 339. Walter de Whytleseye also, mentions among other gifts made by abbot Geoffry to his church of Peterborough, "unum vas argenteum et deauratum ad modum turris cum lapidibus impressis, et imaginibus sanctorum circumstantibus pro corpore Christi in principalibus festis ante processionem deportandum." Edit. Sparkes, p. 163. cf. p. 170. And once more, the following from Matthew Paris, concerning Simon, abbot of S. Albans, who gave a splendid shrine to his abbey. "Et ad perpetuendam ipsius cum benedictione memoriam, constituit ut in dominica palmarum, corpus Dominicum in ipso scrinio veneranter reponeretur, et ab aliquo fratrum moribus et ætate venerabili, in casula alba usque ad papilionem in cœmeterio de pretiosissimis pallis compositum, nisi inclementia auræ impediatur, et tunc in capitulum deportaretur, duobus fratribus in cappis, brachia bajulantis dictum vas, honorifice sustentantibus. Et eodem modo, sequente processione, ad ecclesiam venerantissime reportaretur." Vita S. Alb. abbatum. p. 1038.

With regard to the processional banners, which were carried in some solemnities, there is a curious question in some diocesan enquiries, published in the year 1253; "An aliqui laici—decertaverint de præeundo cum vexillis in visitatione matricis ecclesiæ." Annal. Burton. Script. Anglic. tom. 1. p. 324. On some occasions, the maniple was ordered to be worn: I mention this, as the question has been much debated, whether that ornament was to be used at any other office, than the celebration of the Eucharist. Roger Hoveden speaks of a procession appointed, "cum sacerdote induto alba, et manipulo, et stola, et clericis in superpelliciis cum aqua benedicta, et cruce, præcedentibus candelabris, et thuribulo, cum igne, et incenso." Annal. edit. Savile, p. 348. To walk in processions with bare feet was frequently directed: for example, in the laws of king

Penances were appointed to be done, in processions: I quote two or three cases, from archdeacon Hale's lately published extracts from the act-books of the ecclesiastical courts of the diocese of London. A. D. 1480. N°. xv. "— penitentia injuncta, quod in toga et camisia, nudis pedibus, precedat crucem processionaliter, cum candela precii unius denarii, et quam offerret processione finita." A. D. 1476. N°. xlj. "Johanna Talbot habet 3 dominicis precedere processionem nudis pedibus, in kirtela, capite flammiola nodata co-operto, in parochia S. Dionysii." A. D. 1496. N°. ccvj. "... dominus injunxit sibi quod præcedat processionem in ecclesia cath. S. P. sequentem le vergears, crucem ligneam manu ejus deferendam et secularem prædicatorem usque crucem, et ibidem maneat, quousque sermo finetur, crucem hujusmodi manus ejus tenendam." A Syon monastery processional is preserved among the manuscripts of S. John's college, Oxford: this volume has English rubrics, for the use of "the sustres."

P. cxix. l. 8. There are two imperfect MSS. which contain a few of the episcopal offices: one of these, Rawlinson, C. 425, belonged to some abbey: the other, Rawlinson, C. 400, is valuable, as it was the property of a bishop of Salisbury, and has a memorandum on the first page. "Hunc librum legavit dominus Rogerus

de Martivale, Sarisbirien. episcopus ecclesiæ cathedrali beatæ Mariæ Sarisbirien. Ita quod loci episcopus, qui pro tempore fuerit, habeat usum ejus si illum habere voluerit, cui tradatur per bonam memorandam, proprietate ipsius penes dictam ecclesiam remanente. Et mortuo quolibet episcopo loci qui ejus usum habuerit, dictæ ecclesiæ fideliter restituatur." Bishop Martivale died in 1329.

The Exeter pontifical (spoken of in the same page) has since been printed by permission of the dean and chapter. I congratulate myself on having been the first to point out its value, and rescue it from the neglect in which it had so long been permitted to remain. It would be well if the edition just published might be useful to the student; but I am bound, however unwillingly, to warn him against relying upon the accuracy of its text: and to acknowledge, that, in my judgment, the care and learning which have been shewn in the performance of the work, scarcely correspond to the zeal, worthy of all praise, which prompted the undertaking.

P. cxl. l. 3. From a hasty examination, I am inclined to think that a "capitularium" is bound up with a "collectare," among the manuscripts of Corpus Christi college, Oxford. (N<sup>o</sup>. 192.)

P. cxliij. l. 5. Since the two first volumes of this work were published, I have satisfied myself that another book, the "Liber collationum," ought also to be included among the ancient service books of the church of England. I had not then been able to see any copy of such a volume, or meet with one referred to or even mentioned by any ritualist. A copy however has been found among the MSS. which formerly belonged to Ford abbey, in Devonshire. It is a thick folio, upon vellum, written in a bold hand of the middle of the fifteenth century; and it is remarkable also, as having many English rubrics. It contains the short lections and homilies which were read, at various times of the year, chiefly during Lent, after collation; whence doubtless its name: which in later years came to be used for any sermon or homily.

Du Cange says: "Collatio, apud monachos præsertim, dicitur sacrorum librorum lectio, quæ stans horis, maxime post cœnam, coram iis fiebat:" and he proceeds to cite various orders of foreign councils to this effect. But that these lections, at least in England, were not limited to extracts from sacred writers, is evident from the Ford abbey manuscript, which has also sermons or homilies.

William of Malmesbury, speaking of bishop Wulstan, among other things says: "collationem quoque frequenter interebat." De gestis pontif. Angl. edit. Savile p. 139. A. About the same time, we learn from Ingulph that some classes of the monks of Croyland were privileged as regarded the Collation: "omnes de secundo gradu. —sint absoluti de lectura martyr-ologij et collationis in capitula,—et omnibus talibus reuerentibus chori et claustrij laboribus." Hist. p. 105. Once more, there are printed in the Auctarium, at the end of the history of Matthew Paris, some monastic or hospital statutes: among them, one, "de lectione le-

P. 1164.

Cardinal Wolsey, in the year 1519, drew up some statutes for the regular canons of S. Augustine: of which one is directed to the collation: Wilkins, Concil. tom. 3. p. 686. In the royal injunctions of 1536, there is an order referring to "all sermones, and other collations." Ibid. p. 814. Again, in the same year, a royal letter to the bishops, commands each "to travel from place to place in all his diocese, and endeavour himself every holiday to make a collation to the people." Ibid. p. 825. Once more, the bishop of London, in 1542, admonished his clergy what they were to teach, in their "preachings, open sermons, and collations." Ibid. p. 866. I have quoted these, as illustrative of the meaning of the term, down to the period at which it became, in such a sense, obsolete.

Dr. Oliver, in his work, the "Monasticon diocesis Exoniensis," mentions a manuscript, formerly belonging to the priory of S. Andrew's, Cornwall, containing several books bound together: among them thirty-three homilies, which from the description given by the learned author, seems to have been the "liber collationum" of that priory. He says: "One of these was read at the collation or evening refreshment granted to the community before complin, on most of the weekdays in Lent: viz. from the first Monday until the last Wednesday inclusively; for no collation was allowed on the four first days, nor on the last three days of that penitential season." P. 36. This would certainly account for the number thirty-three in this book: but the use of Ford abbey was different: as they had "collations" not only at other times of the year, as I have already mentioned, but the manuscript contains "On asche wedensday a collacōn:" followed by "For the fyrst weke of clene Lent a collacion."

White Kennett has plainly confused the two books in the glossary prefixed to his parochial antiquities. The day of the "obit" was not always the day of the death of the individual, as Dr. Todd has observed in his learned preface to the Dublin Antiquary, p. xxix: whence care must be taken in consulting the ground of such entries only, the date of the death of an individual. Thus in a very early charter of the council of Cloveshoo, in 747, the day of the obit of the barial ordered to be observed as usual, is the same, Ann. tom. 1. p. 97.

In the collection of any service-books, where regular services were used for the purpose of observing the annual festivals to be observed. Wilkins in his Itinerary mentions many such services, p. 17: and numberless manuscripts prove the same thing. In the Antiquary, p. 100, is a notice of the service performed in the Archæologia, p. 100, in the church of Sir John Fastolfe, in the county of Norfolk, in his chapel, "j. Morning prayer, which is in a note, to have been the same, which I much doubt: and should decide it to have been the book of obits, observed in that family. It is scarcely probable that the reading of the martyrology would have formed a part of the services and devotions of a private household.

the service, and by degrees the service of the church obtained the name of obituary." Ant.

P. clxx. l. 20. In the year 1535, the archbishop of York writes to the king: "Opon good Fridaye last past, I charged the treasurer of Yorke, that he sholde leave ouzt the colett pro papa, lykewies I charged the deacon that songe the hymne Exultet angelica in the halowinge of the paschall, that he sholde leave ouzt mention therein made de papa." Ellis. Orig. Letters. 3rd Series. 2. 329.

With respect to the ridiculous citation of archbishop Becket, I must correct an error in the note. (85.) The date which I have ascribed there to a diary, occurs in an official letter from a public officer, Penison, to the prime minister, Cromwell. As to the fact however, I would remark further, that archbishop Parker, a contemporary, appears to have believed it. De ant. ecc. p. 209.

In the year 1555, there was published an order by cardinal Pole, that all these rased names should be restored. "Id etiam curent, ut sacrorum canonum instituta in omnibus observentur, et nomen divi Thomæ martyris, necnon sanctissimi domini nostri papæ ex libris dispunctum, in illis restituatur, et pro eo secundum morem ecclesiæ, ut ante schisma fiebat, oretur." Wilkins. tom. 4. p. 139.

P. clxxviiij. note. Besides authors, whose prejudices, some might say, led them to condemn the wholesale confiscation by Henry viijth of sacred property, other writers speak no less plainly. Selden condemns it, in his history of tithes, p. 471, 486. (edit. 1618.) White Kennett also, in his history of Impropriations,

~~p. 186. 438. and to name no more; in his parochial antiquities, vol. 2. p. 64. and p. 51.~~

P. clxxxj. note. 97. Richard Layton writes thus to Cromwell, in a letter in which he invites him to his house. "Simeon was never so glade to se Chryst his master, as I shalbe to se your Lordeshipe in this your owne house, and all that ever shalbe in hit for my lyffe." Original letters. series. 3. vol. 3. p. 71.

I am not an advocate for the restoration in this country of the old monastic system, and, I confess, regard with some suspicion and dislike the arguments which have, lately, been produced in favour of it. Nor do I wish to varnish over the abuses which prevailed in it, at the beginning of the sixteenth century. But, if we would desire to arrive at a just judgment, as to the state and morals of the monks and nuns of England at that time,—neither listening too much to exaggerated statements of vice and profligacy upon the one hand; nor to flattering descriptions of faultless excellence and purity upon the other;—we must not forget to enquire, as accurately as possible, into the personal character of those witnesses, upon whose evidence mainly, an unqualified condemnation has been pronounced against them.

P. ccvj. l. 25. Fonts were ordered to be kept locked: thus; by a constitution of archbishop Edmund, A. D. 1236. "Fontes sub serura clausi teneantur." Concil. tom. 1. p. 636. In the province of York also, among the necessary furniture of churches, there was ordered in the same century, "fons sacer cum serura." Ibid. p. 698. cf. tom. 2. p. 280. In some churches, the remains of the ancient fastenings may still be seen.

dern times, upon which I must make a brief remark : namely, that clergymen should suffer a common and small bason to supply the place of a font. It is a fact scarcely credible (remembering the doctrine of the church of England in this matter, and the rubrics of her office of public baptism), that in many churches, of large and populous parishes, there actually is not a font. I cannot conceive a reason, why any person can permit so scandalous an indecency : and it is much to be wished, that the ordinaries both had the power, and would exercise it, of enforcing obedience to the rules of the church in this respect. I would quote one or two directions regarding it, since the reformation. From the "Booke of certaine Canons," in 1571. "They shall see, that in euery churche there be a holy founte, not a basen, wherein Baptisme may be ministred, and it be kept comely and cleane." Edit. J. Daye. 4to. Again, the visitation articles of Bancroft, bishop of London, in 1601 : "x. Whether doth your parson—— baptize in your parish church or chappel, any infants, not in the fonte, according to the ancient custom, but in a bason?"

I would add here, a rubric, in an early pontifical (imperfect, and apparently English), preserved in the library of the university of Cambridge. (Ll. 2. 10.) After the third dipping ; "Et tertio dicens, et Spiritus Sancti, Amen. tunc projiciens eum in fontem discedat : dans locum hominibus eum elevandi de fonte, dicens orationem hanc : Deus omnipotens, etc."

P. ccix. l. 17. Upon this whole subject, the student should consult a work, in which there is much curious learning, by Cangiamila, "Embryologia sacra, sive de officio sacerdotum, medicorum, et aliorum circa æternam parvulorum in utero existentium salutem." Pa-

“... make some remarks in other parts of the work upon the prohibition even to deacons to baptize, except in cases of necessity. There is a remarkable case however, recorded in Matthew Paris: the baptism of prince Edward, eldest son of Henry III. “... infantem catechizavit, legatus autem de curia non erat sacerdos; archiepiscopus autem Cantuariensis ipsum confirmavit.” Hist. 2. 4. 8. The historian expresses his own astonishment at the circumstance.

On the other hand there is a constitution, in the preceding century, of the diocese of Worcester: “... post triduum portentur ad ecclesiam in terra baptismalis abluendi.” Concil. tom. 1. p. 387.

The following is the form of certificate appended to the Sacram Manuals. “*Forma litterarum quibus denotatur presentium pro matrimonio contracto. P. ccxxiv. l. 12. The synod of Exeter, in 1287, specifies the penalty upon neglect. "Quodsi quemquam juvenem vel senem culpa, negligentia, vel absentia sui sacerdotis (quod absit) absque baptismo, confessione, dominici corporis perceptione, ac extrema unctione præveniri morte contigerit; sacerdos super hoc convictus, a celebratione divinorum protinus suspendatur; cujus suspensio minime relaxetur, donec tam grande crimen pœnitentia condigna meruerit expiari." Concil. tom. 2. p. 135.

P. ccxxvii. l. 2. The old histories and chronicles are full of proofs of the popular belief, as regarded the necessity of the viaticum. For example, see Matthew Paris, pp. 6. 156. 183. 306. 503. But still it was not believed, or taught, that mere reception of the holy Eucharist, upon a death-bed, was alone sufficient to secure salvation. Arnold, in the curious miscellany called his chronicle, has an extract which I would quote: concerning a young man, who "was howled and amēd and soo died, and a fewē daies after he apiered—and seid he was dampned, for he had will if he myght have lyued to have turned to his synne ageyn:—therefore, he sayd, alle my confession and all that I did in ressayving my sacramentis, it auayled me not:—for our Lord seyth in the gospel of John, qui manducat et bibit indigne iudicium sibi manducat et bibit. etc." p. 223.

There are instances in which the term "viaticum" is not to be understood of the last communion of the sick. Thus, in the constitutions of Otho; "Prædictæ vero concubinae clericorum, ab ingressa ecclesie, dum celebrantur divina, penitus arceantur, nec eis paschali tempore tribuantur viaticum, cum iudicium sibi manducant et bibunt, qui illud indigne assumunt." Concil. ann. 2. p. 3. Compare also, the constitutions of arch-bishop Peckham. ibid. p. 52, in which our Blessed Lord is said to have given Himself, "infinito amore, in viaticum ecclesie."

During pestilence, permission was sometimes granted, to receive the viaticum at the hands of a deacon: but not extreme unction: "sacramentum eucharistiæ in absentia presbyteri poterit per diaconum ministrari. Si vero non sit presbyter, qui sacramentum unctionis extreme ministraret, debet, sicut in aliis, fides sufficere sacramenti." Ibid. p. 746. See above, p. cix. and, ivi. 1. p. 59.

The light, so frequently ordered in earlier times, was forbidden in 1549. "Item, that going to the sick with the sacrament the minister have not with him either light or bells." But, in the reign of Q. Mary, the old rules were enjoined once more, as appears from one of cardinal Pole's visitation articles, of 1557: "Whether

At the administration of the communion to the sick a candle was to be always lighted, according to some constitutions of the diocese of Sodor, in 1291: and this is a rule which was, I have little doubt, generally observed, as appears from illuminations in manuscripts. "Cum ad infirmos accesserint, moneant eos salubriter, nec aliquos sine candela accensa de cera communicet." Concil. tom. 2. 175. Clergy, whilst carrying the Holy Eucharist to the sick, were privileged from arrest; and an infringement of this, formed one of the grounds of complaint of the convocation of 1399. Ibid. tom. 3. p. 245. Foreign canonists have extended this privilege so far, as to assert that persons might avail themselves of the protection of such a procession: "sacerdos eucharistiam deferens ad se confugientibus asylum præstat." Cf. Devoti. Instit. Canon. tom. 2. p. 333. Ferrarius. Bibliotheca. verb. Immunitas. Giraldus. Expos. Juris. pontif. 1. §. 637.

P. ccxxxiv. l. 33. From a remark in Matthew Paris, Hist. p. 707, it would seem, that after the rite of extreme unction all ornaments were removed from the person: and from the same author, that in some monasteries, certainly in S. Alban's, the sick members were conveyed to the infirmary to receive it. "Sustentantes eum hinc inde fratres, duxerunt eum prout præcepit in infirmariam, ubi solemniter super lapidem ad hoc consuetum, oleo sancto infirmorum est inunctus, et salutis viatico communitus." p. 1045.

P. ccxl. l. 5. A payment or fee was due for this. Lanfranc says, in an epistle to a bishop of Chichester: "Chrisma tamen a vobis accipiant, et ea, quæ antiqui-

tus instituta sunt, in chris-matis acceptione persolvant." These fees were sometimes granted to the support of monasteries: "ego Ernulphus, episcopus, concessi in perpetuum ad ædificandas et sustentandas domos monachorum, denarios, quos presbyteri parochiani solent reddere, quando chrisma accipiunt." Textus Roffen. p. 192: and the same manuscript has an account of the various payments which were to be made by each parish and chapelry in the diocese. p. 228. A singular use also appears very anciently to have been made of these periodical attendances upon their diocesan by the parochial clergy. "We enjoin, that every priest be able to declare, when he fetches chris-m, what he has done in prayers for king and bishop." Canons under K. Edgar. Thorpe. vol. 2. p. 259. Probably it was an opportunity for the purpose of making other enquiries, into the condition of the people and clergy. Hence, there were frequent rules passed for the residence of bishops at their cathedrals, on the stated times of the year for the consecration of chris-m: compare the Concilia: tom. 2. p. 10. tom. 3. p. 613.

Monasteries frequently obtained the privilege of applying to any bishop, (to the prejudice of their diocesan) for chris-m. See above, p. cxxvi, and Thorn's chronicle, Script. x. tom. 2. p. 1835.

P. ccxlj. l. 15. The penitential of archbishop Theodore says: "si quis sepulchrum violaverit. vij. annos, iij. in pane et aqua." Thorpe, Anglo-saxon laws. vol. 2. p. 28. And the excerpts of Egbert add to this rule; "Si clericus in demoliendis sepulchris fuerit deprehensus, a clericatus ordine pro sacrilegio submoveatur." ibid. p. 108. In later years, one of the canons under king Edgar, laid upon penitents the especial duty of burying the dead. ibid. p. 283. Compare the

In the year 1518, some constitutions of the province of York, reenacting earlier canons, decreed: "Firmiter inhibemus, ne cuiquam communicatio corporis Christi, vel morienti ecclesiastica sepultura, prætextu cujuslibet debiti, denegetur." Concil. tom. 3. p. 672.

P. ccxlij. l. 4. Among the fragments and capitula of archbishop Theodore, is the following, both interesting and important: "Quæsitum est ab aliquibus fratribus, de his qui in patibulo suspenduntur pro suis sceleribus, post confessionem Deo peractam, utrum cadavera illorum ad ecclesiam deferenda sint, an non?" Thorpe. vol. 2. p. 73. And it is said, that the Holy Eucharist might be given, but nothing is decided as to burial: unless that might be supposed to follow, after reception of the communion, as a matter of course. Some centuries later, Ælfric, in his homily of "the Greater Litany," laid down more strictly, "the possessions of no sinful man are to be received at his end, nor let his corpse be buried in a holy place." vol. 2. p. 345.

P. ccxliv. l. 29. It was usual to carry lighted candles, before the corpse, to the church; and omens were drawn from their continuing lighted. Many allusions to this occur in the chronicles: I take one from Matthew Paris: upon the burial of an earl of Salisbury, in 1226. "Contigit autem, quod dum de castello ad novam ecclesiam corpus ejus ad tumulandum portaretur, cerei qui cum cruce et thuribulo de more portabantur accensi, inter pluviarum effusiones, et ventorum turbines, lumen continuum in itinere ministrabant; ut aperte ostenderent comitem tam ardue pœnitentem, ad lucis filios pertinere." Hist. Angl. p. 277. Compare an order about the funeral taper, in the Concilia, tom. 3. p. 567.

P. cclv. l. 20. There was anciently a small fee attached to the hallowing of water: this was called the "beneficium aquæ benedictæ," and was usually given to some poor scholar or clerk. I have not met with a similar rule in foreign churches; and it seems to have been peculiar to England. Thus it was ordered in some constitutions of the diocese of Salisbury, in 1256: "Personæ vel vicarii dabunt beneficium aquæ benedictæ clerico pauperi scholari, ita quod veniat omnibus solennibus diebus ad ecclesiæ serviendum, de qua habet dictum beneficium." Concil. tom. 1. p. 714. This disposal of it was occasionally disputed by the parishioners; and the synod of Exeter, 1287, repeats the order, adding, "si parochiani malitiose subtrahere velint eleemosynas consuetas, ad ipsas sibi largiendas sollicitè moneantur, et, si necesse fuerit, compellantur." ibid. tom. 2. p. 147. In a constitution of the diocese of Winchester, in the year 1308, it is spoken of as the "beneficium aquæ portandæ," which, in like manner, is to be applied to the support of poor scholars. ibid. p. 297. And from a decree of archbishop Courtney, in 1393, it would seem, that a part of the duties of these "clerici aquæbajuli," was to carry the holy water, into various parts of the neighbouring parishes: and sprinkle houses with it; that is, doubtless, if they were required to do so: as it is plainly expressed in a diocesan canon of the bishop of Coventry, in 1247; "quia plerique scholares carent necessariis, quorum scientia multi per gratiam Dei potuerunt ædificari;

When this office was wisely abolished, at the beginning of the reformation, the unavoidable loss of provision which it occasioned to poor scholars, was made up, or at least it was intended it should be so, from other sources: and among the injunctions published by the king's visitors in 1548, was this; "forasmuch as the parish clerk shall not hereafter go about the parish with his holy water, as hath been accustomed, he shall instead of that labour, accompany the churchwardens," in registering the sums of money collected for the poor. ibid. tom. 4. p. 29.

P. cclvj. l. 12. In limiting the introduction of the use of holy water to the ixth century, I cannot but have been in error: which I am ready to take this opportunity of acknowledging. In the seventh century, archbishop Theodore says, in his penitential: "Aqua benedicta domos suas aspergant, quotiens voluerit, qui habitant in eis. Et quando presbyter consecraverit aquam, primum orationem dicat." Thorpe. vol. 2. p. 58. And there is a remarkable place in Bede, in an epistle from S. Gregory to Mellitus, where the pope directs the heathen temples to be sprinkled and purified with holy water. Hist. Ecc. lib. 1. cap. 30.

P. cclx. l. 1. That such an abuse prevailed, is clear: and the reader may compare a proclamation, in the year 1538, which, speaking of the holy bread, says, among other things, that it was intended, not to supersede, but "to put us in remembrance of the howsell, which in the beginnunge of Christe church men did oftener receive, than they use now to doe." Concil. tom. 3. p. 842.

P. ccciv. l. 1. Absolution was occasionally granted to persons after death; chiefly, as it would seem, that they might obtain the rites of Christian burial. A commission from the archbishop of Canterbury for this purpose, is printed in the Concilia. A certain man had died excommunicate, and not only an absolution is ordered to be pronounced, but prayers and psalms, usual at such solemnities. What these were, does not appear. tom. 2. p. 531. This was in the year 1326. Another was granted, in 1369. Also by the archbishop. Some years ago a stone coffin was discovered in the cloisters of Chichester cathedral, and close by it, was found a thin plate of lead, with a form of absolution upon it, granted to Geoffry bishop of Chichester in 1088. Archæol. vol. 23. p. 419. It is not improbable, that in such cases, of persons absolved from ecclesiastical censures after death, the absolution was buried with them.

"She was a worthy woman all hire live, Housbondes at the chirche dore had she had five." prol. 461.

And compare the account of the marriage in the merchant's tale:

And bade hire be like Sara and Rebekke; etc." l. 9577.

There is a remarkable passage, in the evidence relating to Sir William Plumpton's second marriage, taken before the Ecclesiastical Court in the year 1472, which shews, that marriages were performed sometimes, not at the door of the church, but at the door of the chancel; that is, I suppose, of the rood-screen.

“Richard Clerk, parish clerk of Knaresborough, deposed—that very early in the morning of the said Friday came the said Sir William and Joan to the parish church of Knaresborough—, and, they standing at the door of the chancel of the said church within the said church, the aforesaid John Brown, [then vicar,] came from the high altar in his vestments and solemnized marriage between them in the presence of the deponent; etc.” Plumpton correspondence. pref. p. lxxvj.

VOL. II.

P. xxxv. Since the publication of the two first volumes of this work, I have found two other manuscript Prymers. One of these is in the library of Queen's college, Oxford: (S. 20. in arch.) imperfect, of about the year 1420. It has the word “corinnice” in the version of the two psalms, vol. 2. p. 22: but the “hours of the cross,” are in rhyme, thus agreeing with the manuscripts in the Bodleian, and at Cambridge.

The other is in the Ashmolean library at Oxford: No. 1288. which I have not yet had an opportunity to examine. The kindness of a friend enables me to state that its contents are much the same with those of the other copies.

P. xlv. l. 10. About the year 1459, a monk at Bolton Abbey is requested in a letter to send a prymer: “as ever I be saved, she praied me write for either salter or primmer.” Plumpton Correspondence. pref. p. xxxix. In the year 1500, among the presentments to the commissary of the diocese of London, occurs: “Avicia Godfrey notatur officio quod subtraxit quendam librum, vocatum a premar Elisabetha Sekett ser-vientis W. Ward extra ecclesiam, etc." Archdeacon Hale's Precedents, No. ccxliij. The learned editor seems to have been in error, in stating this to have been a case of "taking a book from the church." I do not remember any example of a prymer, among the service books of a church; nor would there have been any need of such a book, for the purpose of public and general prayer.

P. xlix. l. 8. The Prymer was not confined to the Church of England; it was authorised abroad also, for the use of the laity. These books are however of great rarity. The Dutch copies the most frequently occur: and I know one, in French, in a private library. A very remarkable printed Spanish Prymer, (Simon Vostre, 8vo.) has lately been purchased for the library of the British Museum.
